Opening Of Abigail Time Capsule Delights Hundreds

By LAURA GRIFFIN

struction workers with wire cutters stripped open the top of the copper-lined 14-inch tin box which had been placed in the Abigail Adams cairn in 1896.

The workers, Duane

Hayden, Supervisor and David Diaz of Phoenix Bay State Construction Co., Boston discovered the box as they dismantled the 14-foot cairn which had been seriously damaged by time and weather over the past century.

in Quincy will be back in class to start the 2008-09 academic year.

In a message to parents, School Superintendent Dr. Richard DeCristofaro promised an open door policy to all who have children in the Quincy schools.

"It is with confidence and pride in the Quincy Public Schools that I welcome students and staff back and pledge my support to all of the families we have the privilege to serve," he said.

"If you ever need to speak with me, feel free to call my office at any time."

The school system, he said, "is proud of its tradition of excellence founded in so many educational and academic opportunities.

Our fine pre-kindergarten to grade 12 system consistently focuses on our students and their families.

"Students who graduate from North and Quincy High Schools gain acceptance and attend the finest colleges in the country.

Health Department Urges Caution

West Nile Virus Detected In Mosquito Found Here

The West Nile virus has been detected in a mosquito sample collected in Quincy, it was announced Tuesday by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health.

The exact spot where the sample was taken was not specified, except that it came from a marshy area.

"There is no cause for alarm," said Health Commissioner Draw Scheele. "Just be cautious during the early morning hours, wear long sleeved shirts and use plenty of mosquito repellent with DEET."

The presence of West Nile virus in a community is measured by its discovery in the local mosquito population and the dead birds found to be positive.

No dead birds that required testing in the state lab were reported found in Quincy.

West Nile virus can infect people of all ages but those over the age of 50 are particularly susceptible.

It is transmitted to humans through the bite of a mosquito infected by the virus.

The Quincy and State Health Departments urge the public to avoid mosquito bites and reduce the mosquito population around their homes by draining stagnant water pools.

The state encourages all residents to report dead birds, particularly crows and jays, by calling 1-866-MASS-WNV (1-866-627-7968).

Early Deadline For Next Week's Sun

Thank you and have a nice, safe, holiday weekend.

Myles Standish Cairn Also Has Time Capsule Quincy's First Cairn Stands Solid After All These Years

There's more than one cairn in Quincy marking the city's spectacular history.

While the Abigail Adams Cairn is simply a heap of stone awaiting reconstruction today, Quincy's other cairn, built a year earlier, remains tall, strong, and, unfortunately, neglected.

The Myles Standish cairn stands nearly five miles away in Squantum Park as a silent sentinel, overlooking the channel between the Quincy mainland and Thompson Island.

This cairn was raised in tribute to Captain Myles Standish and his friend and guide, Squanto or Tisquantum.

Both the Adams cairn, built in 1896, and the Standish Cairn, built in 1895, were erected by the Daughters of the Revolution, in conjunction with the Quincy and Boston Historical Societies.

Deep in its interior, the Standish cairn also holds a time capsule, but there are no secrets.

An itemized list of that time capsule were meticulously recorded in published reports of the Standish cairn dedication held on Sept. 30, 1895 and preserved, today, on microfiche at the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Tucked in the box at the Standish cairn are a map of Quincy, remarks by the Honorable Charles Francis Adams, newspapers, historic lists, dedication invitations, a copy of the city's sewer map, and, just as a teaser, a sprinkling of coins and other tokens.

The Quincy Historical Society supplied the boxes for the corner stones of both cairns and the bill for the cost of the box was also saved.

Unveiled on Sept. 30, 1895, the Standish cairn commemorates the landing of the pilgrim leader, Captain Myles Standish, and Native American Squanto or Tisquantum on the Quincy mainland on Sept. 30, 1621.

Standish and his party of Pilgrims and Squanto, actually spent the previous night of Sept. 29 on Thompson's Island.

According to published reports, the Standish cairn was dedicated on a glorious fall Monday in 1896.

The main speaker was Adams who would later become a Quincy mayor and be appointed Secretary of the Navy by President Herbert Hoover.

In his speech, Adams described Standish's trip from Plymouth and lauded the guide Squanto for whom Squantum is named. The Nelson Titus's of Squantum organized the event.

The ceremony attracted some 200 persons, a Who's Who of the Social Register, to what is now Squantum Park or Squaw Rock Park.

"Barges and carriages were waiting at the Atlantic station to meet the people who came by train, others came by private carriages," notes the Oct. 1, 1895 issue of the Quincy Daily Ledger.

THE MYLES STANDISH CAIRN, erected in 1895, also holds a time capsule but the contents are known. Located in Squaw Rock Park, known as Squantum Park, this cairn commemorates the landing in Quincy of Standish and his Native American friend and guide, Squanto or Tisquantum.

Quincy hotels, such as the Greenleaf and the Hancock, reported guests from Philadelphia, Providence, Cambridge, and Bath, ME to note a few.

And it is reported that very special parties arrived in 'tally-ho's' which were coaches drawn by four horses.

A polished granite block donated by Swithin Brothers describes Standish's historic landing. Today, it is faded and illegible in spots.

The Standish cairn appears neglected today. The landmark site is overgrown with weeds and the spikes on the rusting wrought-iron fencing encircling it appear to have been bent by vandals.

But the century old cairn is still solid.

Joint Convention To Pick Mulvey Successor Sept. 2

A joint convention of the City Council and the School Committee will meet Tuesday, Sept. 2, at 6 p.m. in the Council Chamber to select a successor to Kevin Mulvey on the School Committee.

Mulvey resigned in January with two years remaining on his four-year term to take a job as human resources director of the Quincy Public Schools.

Mayor Thomas P. Koch, who called the convention, has talked State Rep. Ron Mariano into seeking a return to the seat he held for 16 years before retiring in 2005.

Since then, however, Karl Roos, a pharmaceutical salesman with three children in Quincy schools but a dearth of experience with elective office, has served notice that he too wants the seat.

Any registered voter in the city can apply for the School Committee post which will be filled by vote of the nine city councillors and the six remaining members of the School Committee.

Mayor Koch himself will have one vote as chairman of the committee by virtue of his office as chairman.

The convention will mark the second time in six months that a vacancy on the School Committee has been filled. The last time, Nick Puleo was picked to replace Jim Timmins, who quit to become city solicitor.

Roos was runnerup to Puleo in that February vote with four votes to the winner's 10.

Koch said he will recommend the same rules for next Tuesday's convention. Each candidate will make a brief presentation followed by questions, then a vote. The first candidate to receive eight votes will be appointed.

The mayor cited as the primary basis of his support for Mariano the latter's experience and knowledge of the city's ongoing school construction projects.

"This is an extraordinary time for our city's schools and Ron's depth of knowledge, his positive working relationships at the state level and his ability to work together to solve problems will be an extraordinary asset on the School Committee," he said.

"I will be proudly voting for his appointment."

The vacancy on the School Committee comes at a time when plans are underway for a replacement for Central Middle School, which has been called by the state one of the most needed projects in the Commonwealth.

The State School Building Authority has already met with city officials on several occasions to lay the groundwork for a smooth and cost-efficient operation.

After that, the city will pursue needed renovation to Sterling Middle School.

'ON THREE, JUMP' and 11 youths hit the water together in a jump from the public pier in Houghs Neck, perhaps the last dive of the summer season as schools prepared to open in Quincy next Wednesday.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Aug. 25, 1875, Matthew Webb, a 27-year-old merchant navy captain, becomes the first known person to successfully swim the English Channel. Webb accomplished the grueling 21-mile crossing, which actually entailed 39 miles of swimming because of tidal currents, in 21 hours and 45 minutes.

• On Aug. 27, 1904, Newport, R.I., imposes the first jail sentence for a speeding violation. Early traffic regulations varied drastically from state to state, some having no speed limits at all.

• On Aug. 26, 1939, the first televised Major League Baseball game, between the Cincinnati Reds and the Brooklyn Dodgers, is broadcast. There were only two stationary camera angles: The first was placed down the third base line to pick up infield throws to first, and the second was placed high above home plate to get a view of the field.

• On Aug. 30, 1945, Gen. Douglas MacArthur lands in Japan to oversee the formal surrender ceremony and drives himself to Yokohama. Tens of thousands of Japanese soldiers lined the roads, their bayonets fixed on him in one last act of defiance.

• On Aug. 29, 1958, pop sensation Michael Jackson is born in Gary, Ind. Jackson began performing with his four brothers in the pop group the Jackson 5 when he was a child. The group scored its first No. 1 single in 1969 with "I Want You Back."

• On Aug. 28, 1968, at the Democratic National Convention in Chicago, tens of thousands of Vietnam War protesters battle police in the streets. Chicago Mayor Richard Daley deployed 12,000 police officers, who severely beat and gassed the demonstrators, as well as journalists and doctors who had come to help.

• On Aug. 31, 1985, Richard Ramirez, the notorious "Night Stalker" serial killer, is captured and nearly killed by a mob in East Los Angeles, Calif., after being recognized. At his trial after the judge imposed a death sentence, Ramirez said, "Big deal. Death always went with the territory. See you in Disneyland."

The Worcester Tornado And Eddie's Diner

Whenever I hear a weather report with the hint of a possible tornado I pay close attention because it reminds me of the Worcester tornado and its awful wrath.

And on a lighter side, I always remember that memorable breakfast the following morning at Eddie's Diner here in Quincy.

That's an odd combination. So, if you have a minute or two let me explain:

That awesome twister tore through Worcester and Central Massachusetts on an 80-minute rampage, taking 94 lives, injuring nearly 1,300 and causing an estimated $53 million in damage on June 9, 1953.

It was one of New England's worst weather disasters and biggest news stories.

Debris fell here in Quincy and the South Shore, carried airborne all the way from Worcester, alerting us that something was wrong.

I was a reporter at The Ledger and got a call at home to go to Worcester to cover the story-if I could get there.

I checked with the Quincy Police Department to see what they knew and learned they were sending a cruiser to Worcester to help police there. Figuring I would have trouble trying to get through sure-to-be roadblocks in my own car, I hitched a ride in the cruiser with Officers Arthur Duffy and Dante Pettinelli.

You might say we got off to a bad start.

We had hardly left the police station parking lot when a tire went flat.

"Don't worry, I'll take care of that," said Pettinelli. He hopped out of the car and it seemed only a minute before he had the spare on and off we went.

As we approached Worcester there were roadblocks but we were waved right through. We arrived at the Great Brook Valley and Curtis Apartments veterans housing project about four miles north of Worcester center that had caught the full force of the tornado.

We could hardly believe what we saw.

The area, with brick apartment buildings occupied by more than 500 families looked like it had been bombed.

Duffy and Pettinelli quickly began helping to police the area and I started gathering information for my story. There was a lot to gather.

The clocks in the apartment were stopped at 5:20 p.m., pinpointing the time the tornado roared through that area on a zig-zag course.

It was a wild scene.

Blankets and sheets were ripped off beds by the force of the winds in some apartments and dangled from shattered windows. Yet in other apartments, dishes and half-eaten dinners were left undisturbed on kitchen tables.

Roofs on some of the buildings were sheared off, copper flashing rolled into twisted balls on others. A kitchen sink hung from branches of a tree.

A row of single-family homes on a slope were mowed down-boards and beams driven across the street and pounded into piles of splinters.

All that was left of one house was the bathtub. A National Guardsman said a man and a woman were blown out of their home and carried 75 yards down the street to their deaths.

There was also a report of a baby being blown out of its mother's arms.

Cars, and a bus, too, were picked up by the tornado's force, flipped over and slammed down on their roofs. A two-by-four beam was speared through a refrigerator.

A witness and survivor said the tornado, with winds over 300 miles per hour, made the famed Hurricane of 1938 look like "a summer breeze."

Pettinelli, Duffy and I spent the night there and headed back to Quincy in the early morning. We hadn't eaten and were hungry.

"Let's get some breakfast," Duffy said.

Cops always know where the good food is. So we pulled into Eddie's Diner, a landmark eatery at Quincy Avenue and Southern Artery, now the site of the South Shore Savings Bank.

"I'll buy," I told them, grateful for them getting me to and back from Worcester in the cruiser. And thinking they might go for a blueberry muffin and a cup of coffee or something light and inexpensive like that.

Duffy and Pettinelli were long-time partners and good cops. With good appetites. And a good sense of humor.

And, as I remember, one of them said: "Well, if you're buying I'll have juice, coffee, a nice big steak and a large order of eggs."

"Sounds good to me," said the other.

"What the hell," I told myself. "I might as well have the same."

And we enjoyed every bit of it.

But then the check came and with it the moment of truth. I didn't have enough money. Reporters didn't make much back then. Still don't, today's reporters will tell you.

I promised the waitress I would be back. Duffy and Pettinelli vouched for my honesty-after they stopped laughing.

Off to the Ledger-then on Temple Street-I went and filled out an expense slip. I handed it to either John Herbert, the editor, or Don Wilder, city editor. Whichever one it was, he had a good laugh, too. But he okayed the amount, I don't remember how much. And said the tornado story was a least a three-steak story.

I went back to Eddie's and settled up.

Pettinelli and Duffy never let me forget that breakfast.

Eddie's Diner is no longer here. It was closed in 1993 after a fire. And in 1998 carried off to New Bedford on a flatbed trailer where plans were to restore it.

Whenever I think of the Worcester Tornado I also think of Eddie's Diner. For a night and a morning, they went together like ham and eggs. Make that steak.

I'd like to see Eddie's back here for old times sake. But I would never want to ever see a tornado like that one in Worcester touch down in Quincy.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1923 real photo postcard view of the old Brooks-Skinner Company's outdoor small-building exhibit on Adams Street in Lakin Square. The company started in Randolph and moved here in Quincy where they built a large fabrication factory on land between what is now Stedman Street and Wallace Road. They sold a wide-range of buildings made of wood and steel including garages, bungalows, cottages, cabins, gas stations, storage buildings, school houses and many others.

Several exciting bills were passed during the state's last legislative session – the Green Communities Bill, the Global Warming Bill, the Green Jobs Bill, and the Environmental Bond Bill, among others. These bills are necessary for the state to reduce its emissions of greenhouse gases, improve its environment, increase the health of its citizens, and, as Governor Patrick says, sow the seeds for a new green economy.

I would like to thank our state legislators and Governor Patrick for making Massachusetts a leader in addressing these important environmental issues.

Quincy's Senator Mike Morrissey deserves special recognition for his work on the Green Communities Bill, which encourages investment in energy conservation and efficiency. It also makes community-owned clean energy projects more attractive than ever.

Energy prices are not going down. I hope Quincy will take advantage of the new policies and its own wind resource to reduce its carbon footprint along with its energy expenses.

Two or three wind turbines the size of Hull II would likely cover the municipality's electric bill.

Mitt Romney Is Best Veep Candidate On Either Ticket

According to a recent newspaper article, Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass.) used website and media conference aimed to discredit Romney as a potential Republican vice presidential running mate for Senator John McCain.

This is what Barney Frank is quoted as saying: "I have never seen anyone so completely without any commitment to any particular principle and so willing to say whatever will help him get elected."

To begin with, I would like to remind Barney Frank that every politician with a chicken's common sense, would say only those things that he would think would help him get elected.

As a governor of a liberal state of Massachusetts, Mitt Romney was happy to honestly and conscientiously represent all people of Massachusetts, whether they agreed with him politically or not.

Barney Frank also misinformed his listeners that he did not know anyone so uncommitted to any particular principle as was Romney's case. Not only the people of Massachusetts but the world at large knows that that is not true. On the contrary, no American, since America began, has been committed so constantly and consistently to the Bible, since the age of 17, as Mitt Romney has been.

While other young people of his age went to France to be taught, Mitt Romney went to France to teach. He went to France to remind the Frenchmen that all their wonderful books would not amount to much if they would forget that it is the Bible that is the best book ever written, and it is the Bible that tells right from wrong.

Mitt Romney, since the age of 17, has been spreading the news that the Bible is cemented in the foundation of Western Civilization.

Yes, he flip-flops occasionally, and whenever he flip-flops he corrects himself. For him the right way is the Biblical way and the right way is for Mitt Romney more important than consistency.

On the other hand, he is fully aware that the obligation of every elected official is twofold: Number 1 – the elected official represents the people and has the obligation to represent the people's views. Number 2 – the elected official is the leader who points the way. He has to be careful, though, when to express his views that may collide with people's views. If his views would collide with people's views he would not be elected, and if not elected, he could not help the people.

Mitt Romney has shown that he is using timing at the right time and would be the best vice presidential candidate not only on Republican but also on Democratic ticket.

LaRaia Master Plan: Raze, Rebuild Half Of Downtown Area

By FRANK MCCAULEY

Mayor Joseph LaRaia will unveil a comprehensive downtown Master Plan in six phases that calls for the eventual demolition of virtually half of Quincy Center from Cottage Avenue to Elm and School Streets.

It will include a new highway through the very center of downtown Quincy from Granite Street across the old Soda Hut through the site of the Kincaide's building, to join a reconstructed McGrath Highway on the other side of Hancock Street.

It will also feature an international merchandise mart over the Hancock Parking area, a high-rise motel topped by a restaurant at the site of Napoli Pizza and a high-rise office building on the site of the Colman's parking lot.

The plan, designed by Planning Director L. Norman Lundin and T. Owen Trainor Associates, Inc., architects, is to be officially presented to businessmen and city officials Aug. 26 at the Quincy High School Method Center.

LaRAIA SEES UNDER $5 TAX HIKE

Mayor LaRaia says he expects that the assessors will be prepared by the end of August, to set the tax rate for 1978 and it will show an increase of less than $5 over the $194.80 rate of last year.

He said the state Department of Corporations and Taxation will probably approve the rate a day or two later if the City Council resolves pending financial matters at its upcoming special meeting.

13-Foot Sunflower Wins 'Grow Together' Contest

Dave Cedrone of 108 Montclair Ave. was acclaimed the winner of the 16th annual "Grow Together" contest with a sunflower measuring just short of 13 feet in height.

First runnerup as a sunflower almost nine feet tall grown by Adam McGlee and the children from the Quincy Point Congregational Church who planted the seed and tended the flower all summer.

A special "honorable mention" went to Mary Ann Mahony and Alyson Ryan of Beechwood on the Bay, which went out of existence as the city's senior center prepared to move in this summer.

"The seniors and Beechwood children planted countless sunflower seeds around the building," said Sharron Beals, the executive director. "Although not 'officially' competing in the contest they were proud to see some of their plants growing to 11 feet."

The contest was sponsored by The Quincy Sun, Beechwood on the Bay and Alquist Flowerland.

DAVID CEDRONE and his girl friend, Stephanie Ennalmi, are dwarfed by their near 13-foot sunflower that won the 16th annual "Grow Together" contest.

Mike Fagerlund Honored On 90th Birthday

The informal event was held at the Food Court at South Shore Plaza where Fagerlund and friends met for their morning walk ritual.

Former Mayor Frank McCauley presented a citation from the City Council congratulating him on his birthday and for his service to Quincy and country.

Among the more than 50 attending were his daughter, Dee Dee Mariano, son in-law Carmen Mariano, president of Archbishop Williams High School; City Historian Tom Galvin, Sandra McCauley and Linda Monti.

"I feel great," Fagerlund told them. And mused: "I just move a little slower."

Fagerlund served on the Board of Assessors under five mayors: James McIntyre, Walter Hannon, Joe LaRaia, McCauley and James Sheets. Twenty years of that service was as chairman.

He served three years with the U.S. Army in World War II and is a veteran of the famed Battle of the Bulge.

A 1935 graduate of Quincy High School, he is proud of attending 72 of the Quincy-North Quincy football games, missing only three while in the Army. He is also a 1939 graduate of Boston University.

And plans to be at this Thanksgiving Quincy-North game.

Koch Names Committee To Monitor Compliance With Municipal Labor Laws

Mayor Thomas P. Koch has announced the creation of a working committee of city officials and labor leaders to monitor compliance with the local municipal labor laws.

The committee will be made up of Thomas Williams, business manager of Laborers Union Local 133; Rick Braccia, business manager of the Carpenters Union Local 424; Mayoral Aide Thomas Fabrizio; Inspectional Services Director Jay Duca and City Solicitor James Timmins or his designee.

They will be charged with ensuring that Quincy's "responsible employer ordinance" is being followed on all public projects and requirements are met by companies bidding on public projects.

"Our administration is committed to an open door with labor and committed to making sure that our labor laws are enforced," said Koch.

"We have many public projects on our plate in the near future and I am proud that we are forging a positive working relationship with organized labor."

The committee will review payroll certification, make sure that contractors are paying prevailing wages, ensure that no illegal immigrants are working on a site and check compliance with other labor laws.

It is likely that the focus of most of the committee's efforts in the near future will be construction of the new Quincy High School, the largest project of its kind in the city's history.

Some labor groups raised concerns about one of the contractors who won a major bid for the project, said Koch. All the contractors were pre-qualified and submitted bids before Koch took office.

City Solicitor Timmins said there have been no legal issues with any of the contractors and oversight has been conducted regularly but the city cannot turn down a prequalified low bidder.

"Our office and the mayor's office has met regularly with union leaders about these issues and this committee will be a welcome added layer of oversight and enforcement," said Timmins.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Halogen Lamps

I was reading a Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) bulletin on tubular halogen lamps, which hinted at the associated risk with them, verses a lamp using a typical incandescent light bulb. I'd like to convey the Commission's concern here to you. (CPSC Issues Warning on Tubular Halogen Bulbs)

Let me first; however, begin by reminding you what a halogen lamp can look like. They were first made available in 1983. At that time they appeared as high pedestal lamps with a glass bowl-like configuration on the top of the pedestal. The halogen bulbs sat within the base of that bowl.

More recently, these halogen lamps also referred to as torchiere lamps, take on a more current designer look. I'm familiar with one, which sits on pedestal with a mobile like appearance, having a long horizontal arm with the bulb located at the very end of that arm. They can be quite modern and sleek looking while there is a potential hidden hazard that you should be aware of if you are currently using one.

A typical incandescent light bulb emits heat at around 260 degrees Fahrenheit. That's enough heat that consideration should be given to maintaining a lamp on a stable base, away from combustibles, so that the hot bulb and combustibles will never come in contact with each other.

On the other hand, a halogen bulb can reach temperatures ranging from about 970 degrees Fahrenheit to 1,200 degrees Fahrenheit. That is a sizeable difference while the higher temperatures dictate a higher risk and consequently more consideration should be given to isolate these lamps from combustibles such as curtains, newspapers, clothing and alike.

Consequently, the CPSC has some specific recommendations for safer use of halogen bulbs:

Never place a tubular halogen bulb in a location where it can come in direct contact with a combustible. Never leave a halogen bulb on when you leave a room or home. Never drape cloths over such a bulb; this was a frequent accidental occurrence when they first came on the market.

If a halogen bulb is equipped with a dimmer switch, operate the lamp at a setting lower than the maximum. And lastly, keep these lamps away from elevated beds such as bunk beds where bedding can come in contact with these typically higher lamps.

The purpose of that bulletin and this article is to raise your awareness of the difference in incandescent bulb use and halogen bulb use. The higher temperature associated with the latter suggests the need for extra safety consideration when using a lamp with a halogen bulb.

Please be mindful of this and use them wisely. Thank you for doing so!

FOOT NOTES

by Joel Chariton, D.P.M.

Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Surgery
Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Orthopedics

CHARCOT'S FOOT

Charcot's foot is a sudden softening of the bones in the foot that develops as a result of neuropathy. This neuropathy, often the result of diabetes, decreases sensation in the foot as well as the ability to feel temperature, pain and trauma. The bones in the foot are weakened enough to fracture, and with continued walking, the foot eventually changes shape. As the disorder progresses, the arch collapses, and the foot takes on a convex shape, giving it a rocker-bottom appearance and making it very difficult to walk. The symptoms of Charcot's foot are similar to those of infection. Although Charcot's foot and infection are different conditions, both are serious problems requiring immediate medical treatment when signs or symptoms appear.

Untreated foot problems can be more than just a momentary nuisance. They can develop into complicated conditions with serious consequences, so be sure to treat your feet to specialized care from a podiatrist. You'll find we are just as concerned as you are about the health of your feet. If your feet are suffering because of neuropathy, trauma, disease, skin or nail conditions, or hereditary problems, we invite you to call 781-986-3668 for personalized foot care. Office hours are by appointment at QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221.

Buying Or Selling in Today's Market? Internet Paves The Path To Real Estate Success

(ARA) - Home buyers and sellers - the relationship may seem like it should be more adversarial than ever, given the current market. Coming at the real estate equation from opposite sides, buyers and sellers may feel they have little in common. The truth is, however, that both groups share a common path to real estate success - the Internet.

The Internet has been revolutionizing real estate for years now; more than 80 percent of buyers look at homes on the Internet, according to the National Association of Realtors (NAR). "More homes than ever before are being marketed on the Internet," says Kendra Todd, of HGTV's "My House is Worth What?" and season three winner of "The Apprentice." "Whether you're buying or selling, it's essential to work with a real estate expert who is on the cusp of the latest trends, especially the Internet."

Even the most technosavvy among us may feel overwhelmed by the volume of real estate information - and listings - available on the Internet. How do you sort through it if you're a buyer? And how do you find the right agent who will know how to maximize Internet marketing value, if you're a seller? Here are tips from real estate experts - Todd, Saul Klein, CEO of Point2 Technologies, the company behind a leading real estate Web site, Point2 Homes, and Brady Pevehouse of Lynk Mortgage and Perrone Realty in central Florida.

Tips for Sellers

* With home prices still falling in many areas of the country, it's probably tempting to try to sell on your own and avoid paying a commission to an agent. "But homes represented by agents historically sell faster and for a better price than those sold by owners," Klein points out. "It's harder and riskier to try selling on your own."

* Select an Internet-savvy real estate agent to represent you. Questions to ask any agent you're considering include: Do you plan to use syndication to publish my listing widely? Do you cover Craigslist, Yahoo!, Google, etc.? How many sites will my home be on? What kind of traffic do those sites receive? Will you purchase ad space on the Internet?

* Use the Internet to find a tech-savvy agent. At Point2Homes.com, sellers can find local agents with sophisticated Internet marketing skills. These agents use Point2 Technologies' Web marketing software, Point2 Agent to syndicate listings and to create and maintain user-friendly, informative Web sites designed to help their clients sell their homes.

Tips for Buyers

* Take full advantage of the Internet's research power. "The Internet can give you more relevant real estate information than just listings," Todd says. "You can use it to evaluate price trends in areas of interest, access city hall records on development plans for your area, check out crime statistics, school facilities and noise issues."

* "Begin with a clear vision of why you're buying and how long you intend to be in the house," Pevehouse advises. "This will help you determine what kind of home you're looking for and what mortgage product is right for you."

* Working with an Internet-savvy agent is as important for buyers as it is for sellers, Todd says. "Does the realtor provide dynamic info? Is he or she comfortable communicating with e-mail, text messaging and other technology tools?"

* While you're researching online, keep in mind the difference between blogs and information, Todd advises. "Blogs are just opinions." Look for fact-based sites and be sure the information you find is not outdated.

* "Real estate is increasingly regional," Todd says.

Large Gash Mars Kitchen Floor

Q. We just closed on a house that the previous owner had to sell in a hurry to avoid foreclosure. One thing that came as-is is the kitchen floor; there's a large gash cut in the vinyl through the center of the kitchen, and the plywood underneath is showing. Should I just glue this down for now? Is it OK to have plywood beneath the vinyl? Thanks — Hannah L., Tampa, Fla.

A. The plywood you see is part of the underlayment, which is the intermediary between the floor joists and the flooring surface on which you walk (in this case, the vinyl). When building a modern house, sheets of plywood make up the base of the floors. These are usually (but not always) topped with a thin layer of padding, followed by carpet, tile or vinyl sheeting.

Underlayment is quite sturdy and, as long as it is not damaged or wet, can last many years.

A thin cut in vinyl sheeting, as long as the edges still meet, can be quickly reglued so that the cut is not noticeable. If the gash in the vinyl sheeting is jagged or the edges are curling back from the cut, you'll probably have to patch or replace the sheet.

As you've just moved in, now might be a good time to consider replacing the vinyl sheet. You can roll out new sheeting or spring for a different floor covering such as vinyl or ceramic tile. It's also a prime opportunity to inspect the underlayment and make sure it is dry, firm and undamaged.

© 2008 King Features Synd., Inc.

Be sure to learn about the market in your area, because it may not necessarily be following national-level trends.

* Don't be afraid to negotiate terms with the seller. "With inventory levels high, sellers can be very accommodating," Pevehouse says. "Many are willing to contribute towards closing costs as an incentive for buyers."

Remembering Kathy Hanabury

Hanabury Foundation Moves Ahead To Save City's Stray, Feral Cats

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Elephants weep and kittens wail and no one felt their pain more than the late Kathy Hanabury.

Friends and family recently marked the 10th anniversary of Kathy's death at age 44 with renewed zest for continuing her work protecting animals.

As a young law student, Kathy pioneered animal rights and animal protections in Quincy and court cases, long before such issues took center stage nationally.

Before Jeffrey Mousaieff's book When Elephants Weep became a best seller, Kathy convinced skeptical city councillors to institute the city's ban on circus elephants.

Last week, Cynthia Haigh of Milton described Kathy's meeting with city councillors in 1995 as "...the finest moment I had with Kathy." Haigh who attended (then) Central Junior High school with Kathy joined with her in efforts to protect animals.

At the hearing, Kathy asked councillors to ban circus animals from the city. According to Haigh, Kathy then described elephants packed into train cars, moved from city to city in chains, trained with hooks, and prodded with iron poles.

Haigh recalls Ward 1 Councillor Leo Kelly supporting the ban by saying youngsters don't need to see "elephants in tutus (when) you can turn on public TV and see how they live in a natural setting."

Other cities have since adopted such bans.

Before outrageous experiments on animals were regularly exposed, Kathy worked with Atty. John McDuff on a landmark court case fighting "The Draize Test."

The case exposed cosmetic companies that blinded rabbits by spraying their eyes with experimental liquid.

One of Kathy's major concerns was always the feral cat problem. Left untreated, stray and abandoned cats multiply by the hundreds of thousands over years and create a local and national concern with millions homeless and howling in colonies.

Kathy was, also, instrumental in moving Quincy leaders to recognize Oct. 16 as National Feral Cat Day, but she didn't stop there. She began serious work on the feral cat problem which continues in her name today.

Kathy Hanabury was young when she was stricken with breast cancer, but her legacy lives on through the Kathy Hanabury Foundation, established by Kathy's mother, Marilyn Hanabury, in 1999.

The foundation is a non-profit 501C organization dedicated to abandoned animals, specifically feral cats.

Back in 1995 when Kathy began her work with feral cats, the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (MSPCA) reported 582,000 stray and feral cats in Massachusetts.

Last week, Hanabury quoted a 1996 Brown and Miriocco study estimating some 60 million stray or feral cats in the United States.

"In a matter of years," Hanabury said that unsterilized cats could produce thousands of additional feral cats. Cats are fertile or in heat twice a year and will produce litters of four to six kittens. "This is a national problem. Feral cats are everywhere."

Funds raised through the foundation are used directly for the benefit and medical care of animals and to support and assist individual caretakers and animal groups engaged in the management of feral cat colonies.

"TNR, trap, neuter, release" is the slogan for the Hanabury Foundation and most groups working with feral cats.

"Every dime we raise goes to veterinarians except for postage," Hanabury said of the Foundation which has treated thousands of feral cats since its inception.

According to Hanabury, the foundations has trapped, neutered and returned 20 to 30 cats a month in the past nine years.

"It's a lot of work; it's time-consuming," said Haigh, describing the procedure for trapping a cat which means waiting until the proper time and having the proper knowledge.

Some veterinarians avoid the feral cat problem while others are eager to assist their cause and, even for large organizations, the issue can be overwhelming.

"Feral cats are everywhere," Hanabury said. "You can talk to anyone in the street. They'll say, 'Oh yes, I've seen cats in my yard."

Hanabury described feral cat colonies in Marina Bay and Houghs Neck and said, in some areas, the problem is especially critical because of today's economic crises.

As a real estate broker, Hanabury sees more home foreclosures today. At foreclosure time, it's not unusual to learn of abandoned animals.

Feral cats can not be domesticated but their kittens, if caught young enough, can be neutered, spayed and adopted.

Nighttime near feral cat colonies sometimes brings the sound of fighting, but Hanabury said, "They don't fight after they've been neutered."

"I know of six caretakers," said another friend of Kathy's, Virginia Hutchins of Quincy. Hutchins described 30 cats in one colony and a colony of four in North Quincy.

"To say that they're wild scares people," Hutchins said, explaining that feral cats are terrified of people. "They just turn around and go away. They will run from people."

The Hanabury Foundation works with Alley Cat Allies, a national resource group for feral cat agencies. The Allies attempt to educate the public and reduce fears that feral cats are dangerous or unhealthy.

In the spring of 2007, the Alley Cat Allies bulletin noted, "The truth is that feral cats as a group are healthy and should be saved and managed with TNR."

Thanks to efforts by Hanabury and then Ward 6 Councillor Alicia Gardner, the City Council endorsed TNR, the trap, neuter, return program as the most effective program in 2005.

Under the TNR approach, colony cats are sterilized and young kittens removed from the colony.

"Trap, neuter and return breaks the cycle of reproduction," according to Alley Cat Allies research which states that if feral cats are removed, then other cats will move in.

"The Quincy Animal Shelter now has a feral cat rescue program and they do a wonderful job," Hanabury said, citing the special work of Jan Parisi.

However, the shelter, a no-kill facility, can not do this work alone, said Hutchins. "They don't have enough people."

She believes volunteer groups, such as the Hanabury Foundation, are essential in addressing the problems.

The Hanabury Foundation will continue its work into the next decade, according to Hanabury who announced she will be stepping down and acting in an advisory position in the future.

Last week, Hanabury announced that Hutchins will serve as president of the foundation and Haight as vice-president.

Hutchins already has plans.

"We've been operating on a very minimal budget," she said, noting that she hopes to establish a web site for the foundation, organize two fundraisers a year, and an educational program for school children as well as information packets for the public.

Hanabury knows her daughter's work will continue and the young woman loved by so many will be remembered, not only for her work with animals, but her love of life on the ski slopes, bicycle trails, and her love of the Boston Symphony.

"There was no one who didn't love her," said Hanabury.

"She was a wonderful person," said Haight, describing Kathy "...as sweet and kind as they come."

A Job Well Done

On July 27, 2008, at approximately 8:43 A.M., Officer William Lanegan was dispatched to an apartment building off East Howard Street on a report of a suicidal party.

Officers Joe McGunigle, Dan Francis and Sergeant Sean Duggan also responded to the call. En route to the call, responding units were notified that the female caller was still on the telephone and was threatening to jump off the third floor balcony. Dispatcher Tim Sheehan kept the caller on the phone trying to convince her not to jump while buying time for the Police Officers to arrive on scene.

Responding Officers were informed that the suicidal woman had her three-year-old son in the apartment with her. When the Officers arrived on scene, they immediately proceeded to the third floor where they were met by a neighbor, who confirmed that the woman was about to jump off the balcony and pointed to the apartment door. Officer Lanegan tried the door but it was locked. Due to exigent circumstances and concern for the woman and the child, he immediately kicked the door in. As the Officers entered the apartment, Sergeant Duggan found the despondent woman just outside her bedroom.

When she saw the Officers, she immediately climbed over the railing of the balcony. Sergeant Duggan lunged for the woman and was able to grab hold of her, but her weight started to take them both over the railing. The other Officers quickly grabbed Sergeant Duggan and the woman, then pulled them back onto the balcony. The balcony was approximately forty feet high and directly below was a paved parking area. The woman was hysterical, crying and screaming, "I want to die" repeatedly. Fallon Ambulance arrived on the scene and the woman was secured to the stretcher and transported to Quincy Medical Center for evaluation. Officer Lanegan went back to the apartment and found a suicide note left behind presumably by the woman. The handwritten note was difficult to read but some parts were clearly understood, such as "I'm sorry God for ending my life", "I want to end my life" "I'm tired of living", and "I want to be a DNR". A second note was also discovered that instructed the finder of the note to call her sister and tell her that she was "sorry for all the pain I caused". Sergeant Duggan was able to make contact with the sister and inform her of the situation. The three-year-old son was transported to the Medical Center via ambulance and the Department of Social Services responded to assess the child's situation. Sergeant Duggan also contacted Special Investigation Detective Karyn Barkas and she responded to the Medical Center too. Detective Barkas interviewed the sister and learned that the woman was depressed after breaking up with her boyfriend and was also facing criminal charges. The sister said that the victim had made comments about suicide recently but she did not think she was serious. Detective Barkas and DSS arranged to have the child stay with the sister while the victim was admitted to the hospital. Nice Work!

In this case, the victim's sister was aware of the suicidal tendencies but shrugged them off. Fortunately, most initial attempted suicides are not successful and too often a relative or friend is heard to make similar comments that they knew he/she was depressed but never thought they would go through with an act to commit suicide. Suicide is such a tragedy for the victim and those left behind, especially those who knew and could have helped if they sought assistance. A simple call, even if anonymous, to the Quincy Police Department would have started the wheels rolling to intervention.

Quincy Community United Methodist To Celebrate 25th Anniversary Of Merger

The Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St. Wollaston, will celebrate the 25th anniversary of its merger with four churches beginning Saturday, Sept. 13 with a dinner dance and buffet dinner.

The merger included Adams Shore, Atlantic, Quincy Center and Wollaston who all came together in 1983.

Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of the church said, "This is a very significant milestone in the history of the church." "It's a time to honor the past, celebrate the present, and anticipate the future."

Rev. Tony Jarek-Glidden, husband of the pastor, will be the DJ for the dance.

Persons are encouraged to wear something silver to celebrate the spirit of the weekend.

On Sunday, Sept. 14, a special worship service will be held, which will include the histories and memories of the four founding churches. Memory books, compiled by Jeannie O'Connor, will be given to all who attend.

After the worship, the annual Homecoming Hot Dog Roast will be held on the church's front lawn. Participants are asked to bring a salad, dessert, or snacks to share. Hot dogs and beverages will be provided.

Participants must have their blood drawn in advance of the screenings during the week of Sept. 8. Blood drawing may be completed on a walk-in basis in the Milton Hospital Laboratory, located on the first floor of the hospital. No appointment is necessary for the laboratory.

reconstructing the cairn as directed by Mayor Thomas Koch who said Monday that a new time capsule will be inserted in the reconstructed cairn. Estimated cost of the project is $50,000.

Wearing protective gloves, Koch withdrew the first object, a book, from the capsule while Ward 2 City Councillor Daniel Raymondi displayed the next object. Raymondi and Margaret Laforest of Quincy lobbied for repair of the Adams Cairn.

Within the box, there were no gold bars and no ox-blood signatures. Instead, there were historic treasures in superb condition.

It didn't matter to the audience ranging in age from toddlers to senior citizens. Each item removed and displayed drew pleased responses from the spectators, all eager to be witness to the revelations.

Dr. Edward Fitzgerald, Executive Director of the Quincy Historical Society, called the finding of the box, "...an unexpected gift from the past to the present."

Chief among the treasures was a perfectly preserved parchment signed by 20 members of the Adams Chapter of the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution (DAR), including Elizabeth Combs Adams, the 88 year-old grand-daughter of John and Abigail Adams.

Once the parchment was opened, spectators believed the first signature was an Abigail Adams original. It was not but it was a duplicate.

When the first item, a book, was retrieved from the box, Dr. Fitzgerald, Executive warned that it was not Abigail Adams' diary. Instead, it was a directory from the Massachusetts Society of Sons of the American Revolution.

The next item was a box of the original invitations to the dedication of the Abigail Adams cairn on June 17, 1896.

Both the date and the cairn's location are significant because they commemorate the Battle of Bunker Hill, a major battle of the American Revolution. Abigail and her son John Quincy Adams watched the smoke rise from the Charlestown battle at the location of the cairn at Franklin and Viden Sts.

"It was a moment that lived in John Quincy's memory right through his life," said Fitzgerald.

A poem written about the cairn for the 1896 occasion was, also, included in the time capsule. A few of the lines from the poem written by Elizabeth Porter Gould follow:

We built a cairn, replete with loving thought

Of her, who, Queen of Daughters, earned a nation's praise....

And may these stones, so blessed by loving hearts and hands

Be lasting symbols of our glorious state.....

James Edwards, President of the Quincy Historical Society, called the cairn "a terrific landmark on our landscape."

BACK TO SCHOOL

Back-To-School Safety Rules

By LT. DAN MINTON
Crime Prevention Officer

It's that time of year again.

Time to send your children back to school. It can be a frightening time for parents, but if you prepare your child for the big world you may help save them from getting into trouble.

- Make sure your children are taking the safest route to school and friends' houses, one that avoids danger spots like alleys, new construction, and wooded areas.

- Encourage your children to walk and play with friends, not alone, and to stay in well-lighted, open areas where others can see them.

- Don't hang a house key around your child's neck. It's a telltale sign that you won't be at home when they return from school. Put it inside a pocket or sock.

- Teach children to walk confidently and stay alert to what's going on around them.

- Encourage your children to look out for other kids' safety and report anything they see that doesn't seem right.

- Tell your children to stay away from strangers who hang around playgrounds, public restrooms and empty buildings.

- Rehearse with children their full name, address, and phone number (including area code) and how to make emergency phone calls from home and public phones.

- Tell children never to accept gifts or rides from someone they don't know well.

- Check your neighborhood for areas that threaten children's safety, like brush in wooded areas, overgrown shrubbery, abandoned buildings, bad lighting, vacant lots littered with debris, no sidewalks or bike paths next to busy streets.

- Teach children to go to a store clerk or security guard and ask for help if you become separated in a store or shopping mall. Tell them never to go into the parking lot alone. Accompany your children to public restrooms.

- Even children no one, not even someone they know, has the right to touch them in a way that makes them feel uncomfortable. Tell them that they have the right to say "No" to any adult in this situation.

If you teach the above tips to your children, they will be better prepared to survive in this great big, sometimes crazy, world.

HEALTH and FITNESS

by Andrea Wyatt
M.S.S., C.S.C.S.

Take a Walk

One of the most basic everyday movements can provide a great start to a fitness routine. Walking can produce health benefits without the need for special equipment or training programs. These include lowering blood pressure, decreasing the risk of conditions such as heart disease and high cholesterol, aiding in lowering body fat and increasing bone density and strength. And when your stress level gets too high — take a walk! It's great for reducing anxiety.

By increasing the number of steps you take each day, you can achieve great results. Researchers have found that 3,000 to 5,000 steps a day equate to about 2 to 2 1/2 miles. Increasing those numbers can only have a greater benefit. Remember, each step takes you closer to your fitness goals.

You might think that your schedule is too busy and that it's impossible to find the time to add more steps into your day. But it may be easier than you think. Taking the stairs at work, parking farther away from a store entrance, or taking the long way back to your office are all ways to add steps throughout your day.

At home, instead of sitting and talking with a neighbor on the phone, try setting up a time when the two of you can walk around the block and talk. If your friend isn't close enough to meet, set up a virtual walking buddy; use a hands-free phone and talk with your friend as both of you walk at different locations. By the end of your walk, you'll have improved your health and caught up on the latest news, all at the same time. This also can be done while completing other daily tasks such as taking care of the yard or walking the dog.

Safety is important. When walking outside, especially alone, it is recommended that you tell someone the exact route you'll be walking and the times you plan to leave and return. Before you leave, call and ask a neighbor to occasionally look out to check on you. Choose well-lit and populated areas where you can be seen.

Be creative! Find new and fun ways to increase you and your family's step each day. You'll be promoting a great fitness habit. I would like to learn more about walking, visit New Lifestyles at www.new-lifestyles.com.

Healthy Eating Tips For The Great American Eat Right Challenge

Survey: Americans Know How To Reduce Their Risk Of Cancer, But Many Are Not Taking Action

New survey findings from the American Cancer Society show that while the majority of Americans understand that eating right and being physically active can help reduce their risk of getting cancer, many are not incorporating this knowledge into their daily lives. According to the survey, 83 percent of Americans believe they can reduce their risk of cancer with a healthy diet. Yet, approximately one-third of the 565,000 cancer deaths expected to occur in 2008 are attributed to poor nutrition, physical inactivity and being overweight or obese.

Some of the key barriers to eating more fruits and vegetables found in the survey include spoilage, cost and the simple fact that Americans prefer to eat other meals or snacks, such as cookies, chips, pasta, meat or potatoes. Barriers to exercising include the notion that health clubs are too expensive, and a lack of time. However, if given an extra hour per day, only 10 percent said they would use that time to exercise.

To help Americans apply what they already know about reducing cancer risk to their daily lives, the American Cancer Society Great American Eat Right Challenge offers tools to help people adopt healthy behaviors that are enjoyable and easy. The Great American Eat Right Challenge website (www.cancer.org/GreatAmericans) contains helpful tips including two video pod casts featuring Food Network Chef and author Ellie Krieger and Colleen Doyle, M.S., R.D., director of nutrition and physical activity for the American Cancer Society. Krieger and Doyle prepare quick, healthy meals in the kitchen while providing timesaving tips and techniques.

"There are many ways to incorporate healthy eating behaviors into everyday life that are affordable, easy, enjoyable and most importantly, help to reduce cancer risk," said Doyle. "Through the Great American Eat Right Challenge, the Society wants to help Americans to translate their knowledge into action by offering a wide variety of tools and resources that will help Americans find easy solutions to live healthier lives."

In addition to the video pod casts with Krieger, the society has also added new features to the Great American Eat Right challenge website-www.cancer.org/GreatAmericans to help Americans eat healthy, incorporate time-saving tips into meal preparation and provide fun and healthy meals for their families:

'Healthy in a Hurry' Parent's Guide: With school back in session soon, parents once again will be faced with less time to prepare healthy meals for the family. This online tool provides 30-minute recipes for parents who don't have much time to cook but want to make healthy, delicious meals or snacks.

Portion Control Guide: Knowing how much to eat is just as important as knowing what to eat. This wallet-sized portion guide can be easily downloaded and carried anywhere to help recognize standard serving sizes.

Eat Right Food Diary: Knowing what you eat each day can help identify patterns of unhealthy behaviors. This printable diary is an easy-to-use tool for people to capture what they eat every day and flag what fuels situations or periods of time when unhealthy eating occurs.

The website also includes a grocery shopping list to help stock a healthy kitchen with nutrient-packed fruits, vegetables and whole grains, as well as recipes and tips for grilling delicious end-of-summer meals.

According to the American Cancer Society's Guidelines on nutrition and physical activity for Cancer Prevention, a healthy diet with an emphasis on plant sources is essential to reducing cancer risk. The guidelines recommend:

Eating five or more servings of a variety of vegetables and fruits each day, choosing whole grains in preference to processed (refined) grains and limiting consumption of processed and red meats.

Avoiding The 'Rakes and Pains' Of Autumn Yard Work

(ARA) - As the leaves turn different colors and the weather becomes cooler, many Americans begin to engage in outdoor cleanup. Consider the number of Americans injured in yard work accidents every autumn and you may begin to suspect that "fall" is actually short for "pitfall." Fall, it seems, is becoming the season for back injuries, tumbles from ladders and lawn mower accidents.

The AAOS offers a few simple tips to avoid common autumn injuries while in the yard:

Rakes and Pains

Brightly colored fallen leaves are one of the charms of autumn, but raking them also sends thousands of people to emergency rooms each year. Raking is vigorous exercise, and you should pay close attention to your arms and back to avoid injury.

To prevent injury from raking, be sure to:

* Warm up for at least 10 minutes with some stretching and light exercise.

* Use a rake that is comfortable for your height and strength. Wear gloves or use rakes with padded handles to prevent blisters.

* Keep your vision free of impediment, like hats or scarves and beware of large rocks, low branches, tree stumps or uneven surfaces.

* Vary your movement, alternating your leg and arm positions often. When picking up leaves, bend at the knees, not the waist.

* Wet leaves can be slippery; wear shoes or boots with slip-resistant soles.

* Do not overfill leaf bags, especially if the leaves are wet. To avoid back injury, you should be able to carry bags comfortably.

* Never throw leaves over your shoulder or to the side. The twisting motion required to do so places undue stress on your back.

Clean up that Lawn

It will soon be time to store the mower until spring, but chances are you will mow the grass a few more times before the snow falls. Or, you may use it to collect leaves or lawn clippings.

You may love your lawnmower, but keep in mind it is a powerful tool - one that can cause significant injury. In 2007, more than 225,000 people were injured by power, manual and riding lawn mowers, according to the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

To avoid lawnmower-related injuries be sure to:

* Make sure the engine is off and cool before you begin any maintenance work or refuel your lawnmower.

* Never use your hands or feet to clear debris from under a lawnmower. Use a stick or broom handle instead. Likewise, never touch the blades with your hands or feet, even if the engine is off. The blade can still move and cause serious injury.

* Never remove safety devices, shields or guards on switches.

* Do not leave a lawnmower running unattended.

* Wear protective gear like goggles and gloves, boots and long pants when mowing. Never mow barefoot or in sandals.

* Do not consume alcoholic beverages and mow.

Ladder Safety

Autumn is a great time to clear out gutters, check roof integrity and wash windows. More than 532,000 people were injured in falls from ladders in 2007, according to the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

To stay safe on a ladder:

* Inspect the ladder for loose screws, hinges or rungs. Clean off accumulated mud, dirt or liquids.

* Make sure all four legs rest on a firm, level surface. Avoid uneven ground or soft, muddy spots.

* Before you climb, be sure all ladder locks and safety braces are engaged.

* Never sit or stand on the top of the ladder or on its pail shelf. These areas were not designed to carry your weight.

* Choose the right ladder for the job. A step stool or utility ladder is good for working at low or medium heights, for jobs such as washing windows. Extension ladders are appropriate for outdoors to reach high places, for when you need to clean gutters or inspect the roof.

* Be aware of your balance. Be careful when moving items off a shelf while you're standing on a ladder. If you have to stretch or lean to reach your work area, it would be safer to climb down and reposition the ladder closer to your work.

DENTISTRY
for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

GUARDING AGAINST INJURY

For children and adolescents who play contact sports, a mouthguard is an important piece of safety gear. New findings in sports dentistry show that, even in such non-contact sports as gymnastics, mouthguards may help protect the teeth. Thus, many experts now recommend that a mouthguard can be worn for any recreational activity that poses a risk of injury to the mouth. While there are ready-made and "boil-and-bite" mouthguards available, mouthguards that are custom made by the dentist are best at protecting the teeth. Generally, a mouth guard covers only the upper teeth, however, in some cases, the dentist will make a mouthguard for the lower teeth. The dentist will suggest which is most appropriate. A properly fitted mouthguard can help prevent broken teeth and injuries to the lips, tongue, face or jaw. It will stay in place while you are wearing it, making it easy for you to talk and breathe. Whether you need brushing tips or your teeth cleaned, we can help. When was the last time you had your teeth checked by a professional? Connecticut Crowned Babe Ruth W.S. Champs

Norwalk Defeats Tallahassee, Florida, 6-3; Series Draws 50,000 Spectators To Adams Field

By SEAN BRENNAN

A new 14-Year-Old Babe Ruth World Champion was crowned at Quincy's Adams Field last Saturday, officially concluding the 2008 Babe Ruth World Series.

The New England Regional Champions from Norwalk, Connecticut defeated the Southeast Regional Champions from Tallahassee, Florida, 6-3, in the championship game to lay claim to the title.

Norwalk and Tallahassee had advanced to the final game after beating the Ohio Valley Champions from Youngstown, Ohio and the Southwest Regional Champions from Nederland, Texas, respectively.

Norwalk beat Youngstown in the semifinals, 7-6, in a thriller that was not decided until the final at-bat and Tallahassee knocked off Nederland in the other semifinal, 4-2.

The Middle Atlantic Regional Champions from Syracuse, New York and the Pacific Southwest Regional Champions from Palo Alto, California advanced to the single elimination bracket but both were beaten in the quarterfinals. Syracuse lost to Nederland 13-0 and Palo Alto lost a slugfest to Youngstown 17-10.

In the championship game, Norwalk, playing as the home team, scored two quick runs in the bottom of the first inning to take an early 2-0 lead.

Behind the starting pitching of Johnny Lautenbach, Norwalk held Tallahassee scoreless until the top of the third inning when Florida reclaimed the lead with a three-run outburst. The boys from Tallahassee were looking to repeat as World Series champs. Last year this same team won the 13-Year-Old Babe Ruth title and after three times at-bat looked primed to make it two titles in two years.

But after going 1-2-3 in the bottom of the third inning, Norwalk retook the advantage with a three-run bottom of the fourth, a lead that they would not relinquish the remainder of the game.

In the fourth, Norwalk scored two quick runs off Florida's Nick Shafer to take a 4-3 lead. With a runner on second and two outs, the World Series' Most Outstanding Player (MOP), Kevin Daniele, smacked a RBI single to left-center playing the fifth run of the game for Connecticut.

Daniele, whose fourth inning base hit was a blow that Tallahassee could never recover from, was the star of the World Series. He not only was awarded the MOP award but also was named to the All-World Series team and was named Player of the Game in four out of his team's six games played.

Norwalk would tack on one additional run in the sixth inning when second baseman Leon Fleming scored catcher Danny Diaz with a sacrifice fly.

Relief pitcher Alex Petridis, who came on in relief of Lautenbach in the third, didn't allow a hit or run in 4 1/3 innings of work and earned the win on the mound for Norwalk.

Connecticut finished the World Series with a 5-1 record and Tallahassee finished with a 4-2 record, which included a World Series opening 2-1 upset loss to Quincy.

Semifinals

The champions from Norwalk needed extra innings against Youngstown, Ohio to advance to the championship game.

Leading 6-1 and needing just six outs to advance, Norwalk allowed Youngstown to score five runs in the sixth and seventh inning to tie the score at 6-6.

Quincy Set To Host Babe Ruth 15-Year-Old N.E. Regional In 2010

The third 14-Year-Old Babe Ruth World Series to have taken place in the City of Presidents in the last five years is officially over, but that doesn't mean Babe Ruth, Inc., is finished with Quincy.

According to Dick Lombardi, president of Quincy Babe Ruth, Quincy and Adams Field has been awarded the 2010 15-Year-Old New England Regional tournament from Norm Messier, Babe Ruth New England Commissioner and International Board Member.

"This is a way for us to stay active in the national and regional Babe Ruth tournaments," said Lombardi Monday at The Quincy Sun. "This regional format is a little less stressful than the World Series, but it still will be a weeklong event with eight teams representing New England."

The 15-Year-Old New England Regional will have sole representatives from Vermont, Maine, Connecticut, New Hampshire and Rhode Island and three representatives from Massachusetts: an Eastern Massachusetts and Western Massachusetts representative and a Quincy representative.

"The current 13-Year-Old Quincy Babe Ruth team is very good and this is a way for them to showcase their skills on a big Babe Ruth stage in Quincy," said Lombardi. "It will be a double-elimination event with the winner advancing to the World Series.

"New England produces some great baseball-Connecticut just won the 14-Year-Old World Series-and this is a way for us to keep Quincy on the national Babe Ruth scene in the coming years."

As for a return of the 14-Year-Old World Series to Adams Field, Lombardi noted that it could be awhile before the tournament comes back to Quincy.

"It is a great event, but it takes a lot of work. We enjoyed putting it on, but we need to take a little break before we think about doing it again."

Smith was called out on a close play at first, giving Norwalk its first 14-Year-Old Babe Ruth WS title.

KEVIN DANIELE, of Norwalk, CT, was named the Babe Ruth WS Most Outstanding Player. Daniele was also named to the All-Babe Ruth WS team, was named Player of the Game in four of his team's six games and also won a Gold Glove. inning, Norwalk slowed down Youngstown in the top of the eighth, setting up the dramatic bottom of the eighth.

Danny Diaz led off with a single to left and a Bryan Daniello attempt at a sacrifice bunt was fumbled in the infield, putting runners on first and second with no one out.

The next Norwalk batter, Alex Petridis, would be the last. Petridis dropped down a bunt with the intention of moving both runners into scoring position, but the when the bunt was fielded, the throw to first sailed into right field and Diaz slid home with the winning run.

In the other semifinal, Tallahassee broke a 1-1 tie with a three-run bottom of the fifth to defeat Nederland, Texas 4-2.

Nederland was the first team to score with a single run in the third. After there were two outs, Stephen Schlett walked, advanced to second on a wild pitch and scored on a Trent Fontenot single.

Tallahassee responded with a run in the bottom of the frame. A lead-off double by Payson Smith was followed by two quick outs, but Garrett Johnson singled to right center scoring Smith and after three innings the score was tied 1-1.

Florida got the winning rally going with two outs in the fifth. A single, an error and a walk loaded the bases and a throwing error scored two runs. The final run was scored on a RBI single.

NORWALK'S TOM SULLIVAN scores to tie the game at 3-3. Tallahassee infielder Cole Davis and catcher Landon Hoffman look on. Norwalk scored three more times to win 6-3.

'A Complete Success,' Says Host Team President And Manager Dick Lombardi

Babe Ruth World Series A Winner For Players, City

By SEAN BRENNAN

The last pitch has been thrown. The last out has been made. And the 2008 Babe Ruth World Series can now be called a success for both the host team and the city of Quincy.

When Norwalk, Connecticut defeated Tallahassee, Florida, 6-3, to win the World Series title last Saturday afternoon at Adams Field, Quincy's third time in the last five years hosting this weeklong event ended and finally gave those who spent months of their own time preparing for this World Series a chance to take a deep breath and reflect.

"This World Series was a complete success," said Quincy Babe Ruth host team president and manager Dick Lombardi. "It was a great event and we had no real problems."

"I don't think we could have asked for better weather. Last week was some of the best weather we have had all summer long, so I think the baseball gods were looking down on us. I couldn't have asked for a better group of players and managers from across the country coming here to represent their respective regions.

"Every last one of them enjoyed their time playing in the World Series and all of them appreciated the effort put in by all the volunteers, host families and the residents of Quincy. It was an enjoyable experience for everyone involved."

For Lombardi and his team, the World Series ended on a low note (a 13-0 elimination loss to Palo Alto, Calif.), but the memories of the team's opening game win over Tallahassee still resonates as one experience no one will ever forget.

"My team put so much time this summer getting ready for the World Series," added Lombardi. "I couldn't have asked for a better group of kids. They played hard in every game and they put so much effort into representing themselves and Quincy.

"Obviously the 2-1 win over Tallahassee a week ago Saturday was the best moment. That was an emotional victory and I think it may have had a draining effect on our play in the final three games (8-0 loss to West Fargo, 7-2 loss to Syracuse and 13-0 loss to Palo Alto), but how we finished takes nothing away from the time and preparation these kids put into getting ready this summer. I am very proud of all of them."

The fact that Quincy had the opportunity to advance to the single-elimination round with a win over Palo Alto showed just how good this team was when many outsiders thought that they stood no chance of even winning a single game.

"We surprised some people with the win over Florida," said Lombardi. "They came in as the defending 13-Year-Old Babe Ruth champions and were a favorite to win it all. The best players from Quincy beat them and that is something we can hang our hats on.

"From a personal standpoint, I was hoping that Tallahassee would win the whole tournament because beating the champs on our home field would have been something, but that win will still be remembered for a long time."

Against Palo Alto, and playing as the home team, Quincy had its star pitcher Lukas McDonough on the bump. McDonough, who threw a complete game four-hitter against Florida, struggled early, giving up four runs in the top of the first that started with a pair of infield singles and ignited the five-hit, four-run frame.

Palo Alto continued its offensive barrage with three more runs in the second, single runs in the third and fourth and four runs in the fifth.

Quincy, which struggled to produce any offense all World Series long, had a great chance to score in their opening at-bat but couldn't figure out Palo Alto's starting pitcher Travis McHugh

DON MCCARTHY
Managing DirectorA THOUGHT
FOR THE WEEK

Today, in the minds of many people, Labor Day will signal the end of summer, the last long holiday of the season . . . a time for a final outing for swimming, picnicking, boating or just loafing. The real meaning of Labor Day has been lost for many in the frantic pursuit of fun.

This is unfortunate, because never before have so many people been able to enjoy the leisure, the luxuries and comforts we see around us in our United States. The rights of labor never have been so certain, nor its obligation to act in a responsible manner more necessary. We must never, therefore, become insensible to the time-honored virtues of thrift, competence and pride in a job well done.

There are the characteristics that have made possible the turning of Labor Day into a holiday of fun and leisure. These are the virtues that Labor Day ought to commemorate and, if the nation is to survive in its greatness, they will be needed as never before in the years to come . . .

PRAYER TO THE BLESSED VIRGIN

"Oh, most beautiful flower of Mt. Carmel, Fruitful vine, splendor of heaven, Blessed Mother of the Son of God, Immaculate Virgin, assist me in my necessity. Oh, Star of the Sea, help me and show me, herein you are my Mother. Oh, Holy Mary, Mother of God, Queen of Heaven and Earth! I humbly beseech you from the bottom of my heart to succor me in this necessity. There are none that can withstand your power. Oh, Mary, conceived without sin, pray for us who have recourse to thee (three times). Holy Mary, I place this cause in your hands (3x). Holy Spirit, you who solve all problems, light roads so that I can attain my goal. You who gave me divine gift to forgive and forget all evil against me and that in all instances in my life you are with me. I want in this short prayer to thank you for all things as you confirm once again that I never want to be separate from you in eternal glory. Thank you for your mercy toward me and mine. The person must say this prayer 3 consecutive days. After 3 days the request will be granted. This prayer must be published after the favor is granted. Thank you. P.J.G. 8/28

Edwards thanked Koch for authorizing the repair of the cairn and, also, thanked Raymondi for his diligence in seeking repairs and Fitzgerald for organizing the ceremony.

Koch explained that the reconstruction was necessary, "We couldn't just patch it. It had to come down."

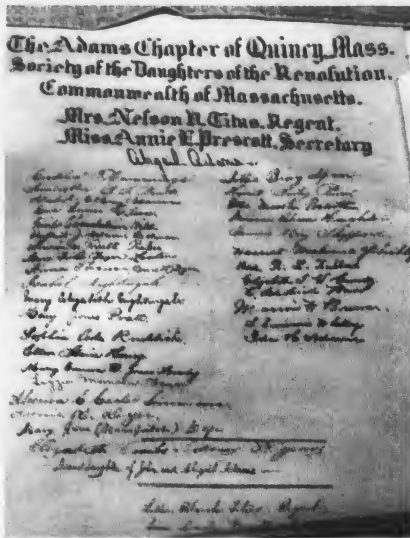

Koch introduced Raymondi and City Historian Tom Galvin.

The audience arrived early and filled the 110-car parking lot by 5:30 p.m. Among the media were television reporters from Channels 4, 5, 6 and 7 and 25.

Jim Fatseas, Koch's Chief of Staff, reported that representative of 'Good Morning America' called City Hall several times regarding Quincy's history mystery.

Despite the lack of gold and lack of locks from Abigail Adams, spectators of all ages loved the show and didn't mind the crush of people who stood shoulder to shoulder throughout the hall and into the hallways.

Teenager Patrick Meade, his 16-year-old sister and Joe Cellini, 15, all thought the occasion was "cool."

"Definitely worth it," said Brianna.

"I think this is fabulous," said Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin who attended as did City Council President Jay Davis, Ward 5 Councillor Douglas Gutro and Councillor John Keenan.

Arthur Ducharme, Director, Adams Historic Interpretive program, did note that no women had a place on the podium. He pointed out the irony that the Quincy Chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution had had the cairn built in 1896 and they were not represented.

130-Pound Tuna Tops Squantum Derby

Squantum's Brian and Brendan Walsh will have a big fish story to tell their grandchildren and it will all be true.

The Walshes and their crew caught a 58-inch, 130 pound tuna last week to win first place in Squantum's fishing tournament, the 4th Annual Causeway Challenge.

The Walshes traveled 50 miles from Orchard Beach in the boat, "Beyond The Bridge," to Stellwagen Banks to snag the record catch, but winning the first prize was worth the journey.

"We caught it out where all the tunas are," said Brendan Walsh, praising the team which Tom Caron, Mike and Paul Bordua

Mike Boucher of Squantum copped second prize with a 39-inch striper and Frank Mastroilli, 3rd prize, caught a 37-inch striper.

The fishing tournament ran from noon to noon and Brendan Walsh said the time element with low tides increased the challenge. Last year, they caught nothing.

The Causeway Challenge is an annual fundraiser for Squantum's Fourth of July parade. Next year's parade will Squantum's 100th parade.

According to Ann Marie Glynn, there were 77 contestants fishing from 24 boats this year for the 24 hour event from noon to noon. The 2008 Challenge raised $3500 for the centenary parade.

Several of the winners, including Walsh, donated their prize money to the parade fund. The first prize was $300.

The Egg And I, 853 Hancock St. donated the refreshments for the cookout which followed for contestants, family and friends.

Glynn and Tracey Brooks are co-chairman of the annual Causeway Challenge. Sheriff Michael Bellotti is chairman of the 100th parade committee.

City Readies Major Flood Relief Projects

Mayor Thomas Koch Tuesday announced a $1,100,000 investment to resolve chronic flooding problems on Woodbine Street and Wesson Avenue in West Quincy and Sixth Avenue in Quincy Point as the first two projects in a broader flood-relief plan targeting neighborhoods across the city.

The $350,000 Wesson Avenue project will be paid for primarily by a grant from the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the $750,000 Sixth Avenue project will be funded entirely under a new program initiated by Koch that will allow money from the city's Sewer Rehabilitation Fund to pay for flood-relief projects.

"These two areas have become unfortunate symbols for critically needed flood-relief projects in Quincy, and I am proud that we are starting to tackle these issues head-on," Koch said. "This is just the beginning. We are committed to identifying chronic problems across the city and completing these projects one by one. Flooding is too serious of a problem for the city to cast aside any longer."

Developers and builders with projects in Quincy pay a fee into the Sewer Rehab Fund, which means no taxpayer dollars will be used for the project. An $80,000 portion of the West Quincy project, supported by Ward 4 Councillor Jay Davis, will come from the Sewer Rehab Fund.

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi has pushed for flood-relief in the Sixth Avenue neighborhood, where backyards and basements frequently overflow with water during rainstorms, for more than two decades. The project calls for replacing a

New City Department To Oversee Finances

Mayor Thomas P. Koch has proposed creation of a Municipal Finance Department to provide better oversight and management of city finances as part of his ongoing restructuring of the government.

Koch presented his proposal to the City Council Tuesday night.

It would make the new department the nerve center of the city's financial operations under the director of Municipal Finance who would be responsible for management and internal controls.

Many of those functions are currently conducted by several different city departments.

A centralized finance department was recommended by Powers & Sullivan, the independent auditing firm that is scouring the city's records and reviewing past operations.

The review has already highlighted a series of problems and vulnerabilities and called a centralized finance department "on the right track" toward fiscal stability.

"There is no question we need a much greater level of accountability and efficiency within our financial operations and this proposal is a major step in that direction," said Koch.

"We are committed to fixing past problems and creating a new foundation to get us on solid ground and keep us there."

The new department will be responsible for accounting, pay-ing bills, reviewing contract and budget management among other duties.

Koch said his plan can be accomplished with only limited additional taxpayer money and will include only one new position.

The new Municipal Finance Department would assume many of the duties currently performed by the city auditor, a City Council appointee who has tradition-

DCR Mounted Patrol Debuts At Wollaston Beach

Big Mike made a big splash when he debuted on Quincy Shore Drive last week and he never even hit the waters of Wollaston Beach.

Mike's only three-years old but the horse surprised, delighted and bewitched a dozen youngsters out for a picnic at Caddy Memorial Park, charmed an older gentleman, Jack Glidden, who was walking the marsh border, and baffled drivers on the boulevard into slowing down for a double take.

The chocolate brown Mike is the first horse to patrol any part of Quincy in a long time. He weighs 1500 pounds and stands 16 hands, three inches.

That's five feet seven inches tall in human's height.

Mike took his job seriously. Before his first patrol, the gelding stood patiently as his handler, Lt. Susan Survillo, introduced him to the youngsters and their mothers.

Survillo, a mounted ranger with the Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR), began her career in Brookline. From 1978 to 1997, Survillo served with the mounted patrols of the Boston Park Rangers where she was promoted to supervisor.

She was also supervisor of the mounted patrol for the Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) and DCR from 1997 to 2005. When the DCR mounted unit was disbanded in 2005, Lt. Survillo was assigned to the DCR ranger unit.

This April, the DCR mounted patrol unit was revived.

"It's good for the kids, teaching them all about the horse," said Glidden who observed the fascinated youngsters.

Mike brought back memories for Glidden who wore insignias from World War II. He recalled the 1940's when a horse and wagon packed with tomatoes and vegetables for sale traveled his neighborhood.

"They gathered around, watched me brush him," Survillo said. "They petted him."

"I haven't seen a horse here for a long time," said DARE Officer Dan Sautter who stopped at the park to meet Survillo and Mike.

"We used to have two horses," Sautter said, describing the Quincy department's unit which offered police visibility as they patrolled Quincy Center. The unit has since been replaced by bicycle and motorcycle officers.

At Sautter's request, Survillo said she would plan a future presentation for Quincy schoolchildren.

Then, with Survillo astride, Mike crossed Quincy Shore Drive and cantered

MOUNTED PATROL AT WOLLASTON. DCR Lt. Susan Survillo and Mike, a 1500 chocolate brown gelding, debuted as mounted horse patrols returned to Quincy last week. Mike is three years old and stands over five feet in height. The patrol will visit Quincy two or three times a month.

proudly along a good portion of the three mile skirt of Wollaston Beach.

"This is just the beginning," Survillo said, adding that she expects to return to Quincy two or three times a month in the future.

Mike is one of first horses trained for the revived DCR mounted ranger patrols. In the past, the horses patrolled the Blue Hills Reservation. Now, they have added other DCR parks, such as Wollaston and Revere Beaches, and will patrol major events, such as this year's Fourth of July concert on Boston's Esplanade, as needed.

"The unit was disbanded in 2005," said Survillo. "We just restarted the unit."

As a result, the unit is training young horses, three to five years old, for patrol and recruiting riders who can handle the sometimes difficult job.

"We've got the equipment and horses," Survillo said.

According to information from the DCR, the patrols use geldings because they have more pliable dispositions. The horses are called "draft crosses."

The DCR mounted patrols were reinstated this year after State legislators earmarked $100,000 in the DCR budget for three horses, two horse trailers, training for rangers and the stabling of the horses at a Westwood facility.

Previously, the patrols were concentrated in the Blue Hills Reservation. Now, they will have wide-ranging duties at the Blue Hills and other DCR facilities.

Sen. Michael Morrissey and Rep. Bruce Ayers of Quincy joined Sen. Brian Joyce and Reps. Walter Timilty of Milton, Rep. William Galvin of Canton and Joseph Driscoll of Braintree in the successful legislative effort that revived the patrols.

Chen Family To Appeal Zoning Board's Decision On Wollaston Restaurant

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The Chen family will bring their case for a Chinese restaurant in Wollaston to Superior Court, according to Judy Chen whose plans for the eatery were rejected last week by the Zoning Board of Appeals.

"We are going to appeal," Chen said Tuesday after describing her family as disappointed with the board's rejection of their plans after the family spent more than a year designing the restaurant project.

Chen said she believes the proposed restaurant designed by a noted Boston architect would enhance the business center and promote Wollaston.

She, also, addressed traffic and parking concerns raised by opponents at the Aug. 26 Appeals Board hearing. She suggested the city needs to correct traffic and speeding problems on Hancock Street so that they don't hinder business operations.

She said the layout for the restaurant allows at least 32 parking spaces which is sufficient for the plan.

According to Jay Duca, Building Inspector and head of Inspectional Services, the Chens have 20 days to challenge the decision once the Zoning Board's decision is finalized and recorded on Sept. 10. That would allow the Chens until Sept. 30 to file an appeal in Norfolk County Superior Court in Dedham.

The Appeals Board unanimously opposed the Chens' request for permission for a change of use for 681 Hancock St., currently zoned for business, at their August 26 meeting. The restaurant area is part of the 15,000 square foot brick building at 663-683 Hancock St. which was built in 1920.

Officials records list the owner as the Exchange Authority with trustees, Judy Chen and her mother, Fai Yin.

The building, also, houses the American Chinese Federation, formerly, the Chinese United Association, which ignited controversy through-out the city in 2006 when they raised the flag of the People's Republic of China atop the building alongside the American flag.

The flag representing the Communist Chinese country is still flown on specific occasions and still offends some city councillors, veterans, longtime residents and immigrants who fled to this country from the oppressive Chinese communist regime.

In October, the flagpole with the offending flag was cut down by vandals in what police called a hate crime. Then, in February, police dismantled the building, charg-

Mariano Seen Filling Vacant School Seat

If things went according to plan Tuesday night and the mayor, nine City Councillors and the five remaining School Committee members met in joint convention, then the School Committee is whole once again today.

And if the vote of the convention followed the odds then State Rep. Ron Mariano is back on the School Committee, his seat for 16 years before he retired in 2005 as his work schedule in the State House expanded.

He was the favorite to defeated Karl Roos, a pharmaceutical salesman with three kids in the Quincy School system, who had also sought without success to succeed Jim Timmins on the School Board at a convention last winter.

Another candidate was Eileen Mullen, who lost a bid for the post in the 2007 election.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Sept. 3, 1777, the American flag is flown in battle for the first time, during a Revolutionary War skirmish at Cooch's Bridge in Maryland. On June 14, the Continental Congress had resolved that the flag would be 13 red and white stripes with 13 stars on a field of blue.

• On Sept. 1, 1864, Union Army Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman lays siege to Atlanta. The Confederates retreated, destroying the city's munitions. In November, Sherman's troops burned much of the city before beginning their "March to the Sea" through Georgia to Savannah.

• On Sept. 6, 1915, a prototype tank nicknamed Little Willie rolls off the assembly line in England. Little Willie weighed 14 tons, overheated, got stuck in trenches and crawled over rough terrain at only 2 mph. A second prototype, known as Big Willie, was produced and ready for battle by 1916.

• On Sept. 7, 1940, 300 German bombers raid London and drop 337 tons of bombs in the first of 57 consecutive nights of bombing. One of Hitler's key blunders of the war was to underestimate the will and courage of the British people.

• On Sept. 4, 1957, Arkansas Gov. Orval Faubus enlists the National Guard to prevent nine black students from entering Central High School in Little Rock. The conflict set the stage for the first major test of the 1954 Brown v. Board of Education decision banning segregation.

• On Sept. 2, 1969, America's first automatic teller machine makes its public debut, dispensing cash to customers at Chemical Bank in Rockville Center, N.Y. In 1971, an ATM that could handle multiple functions was introduced.

• On Sept. 5, 1972, at the Summer Olympics in Munich, Germany, a group of Palestinian terrorists known as Black September storms the Olympic Village apartment of the Israeli athletes, killing two and taking nine others hostage. In an ensuing shootout at the Munich airport, the nine hostages were killed along with five terrorists and one West German policeman.

McCauley Walks On ... And On

Would you like to take a walk?
Say, about 20,000 miles.

It might take awhile. But former Mayor Frank McCauley is closing in on that mark.

He's been walking alternating week-end and daily routines since 1965. Early this year he reached 19,000 on his way down the home stretch to 20,000.

Dee Dee McDermott and colleagues at the Thomas Crane Public Library Research Department got out their measuring tape to determine that 20,000 miles is the equivalent of walking from Quincy to:

The North Pole or somewhere in the middle of the Pacific Ocean or Monaco depending whether you head South, East or West.

Or walking to California nearly seven times.

McCauley has temporarily suspended walking while recuperating from recent minor surgery. He expects to resume this month and go for the 20,000.

McCauley, who will turn 79 Dec. 27, doesn't intend to stop at 20,000. His new goal: 25,000 miles.

"Walking 25,000 miles is the equivalent of walking around the Earth at the Equator," he says.

"Reaching that goal, of course, depends on my health and the plans of the Good Lord."

But right now he's in the mood to get going.

In 1965, McCauley, then a freshman city councillor and treasurer of the old Shipbuilder's Cooperative Bank, discovered during a physical checkup his weight had ballooned to 209 pounds.

That came somewhat of a surprise if not a shock. He was a skinny kid growing up in Houghs Neck and because he was underweight even needed a waiver to join the Navy after graduating from high school in 1948.

On his doctor's advice he started to do some jogging at the then Quincy YMCA. After gall bladder surgery in 1973 he was advised to walk instead of jog.

He set up routes around the city including Sea Street and Quincy Shore Drive and measured the distance with his car odometer.

He has also participated in fundraising walk-athons: 20-mile Walk For Hunger, Interfaith Social Services Walk, Jimmy Fund Marathon Walk for the Dana-Farber Institute over the same 26.2 mile route as the Boston Marathon. He raised over $34,000 in sponsor donations for the treatment of cancer in children.

In 1997 he started walking on a daily basis and keeping mileage records. That first year he clocked 904 miles and his mileage has gone up each year since. His top year was 2,650 in 2006. (Other sample year totals: 1,350, 1,423, 1,725 and 2,345)

His favorite 100 miles were those he did during last year's city election, walking door to door around the city distributing campaign literature for his daughter, Jennifer Logue, making her political debut as a city councillor at-large candidate.

"Walking is good for you," McCauley says.

He credits it to sparing him from need of knee and hip replacement that threaten senior citizens. His only problem has been calluses from vigorous walking.

His weight, by the way, is now a trim 173 pounds—some 36 pounds less than the 209 back in 1965.

Incidentally, he says he would be happy to do another 100 miles for Jennifer in next year's city election.

PAUL HAROLD WILL be remembered Saturday at the 4 o'clock Mass at St. Ann's Church, Wollaston.

HAROLD

The anniversary and memorial Mass will commemorate his 60th birthday and the sixth anniversary of his death in August 2002.

Harold, who served as state senator, city councillor and Norfolk County register of deeds, was one of Quincy's all-time popular political figures known for "putting people first."

His death was a great loss to the city.

BILL DRAICCHIO, retired Quincy police officer and a member of the Board of Voter Registrars, is recuperating at home after surgery.

Many former Pollard and St. Joseph's school students will fondly remember him as Officer Bill who crossed them safely at the busy intersection of Washington Street and Southern Artery.

DRAICCHIO

Thinking of you, Billy.

A COUPLE OF reactions to the recent column on pet peeves.

Florence Cashman Biller, 1000 Southern Artery writes: "Add mine. How about a large hand to swoop down and slap the pedestrian who pushes the "Walk" button but doesn't wait for the light to change.

"Now it is red and yellow and he-or she-is half a block away while all the cars idle watching nobody crossing."

And John Caporale, Jr. of Falls Blvd kind of had us as his:

"Speaking of pet peeves, how about the weekly newspaper that prints the same crossword puzzle in a row. Only kidding, love your paper."

Sorry about that mix-up, John. That can be annoying. One consolation: it's easier to do the same puzzle the second time. (Just kidding).

GOP City Committee To Meet Sept. 9

The Quincy Republican City Committee will meet Tuesday, Sept. 9 at 7 p.m. in the second floor community room at Roche Brothers supermarket, 101 Falls Blvd.

All city committee members, registered Republicans and interested volunteers are welcome to attend.

The meeting will focus on volunteer activities surrounding the Sept. 16 primary and Nov. 4 presidential election.

Since reorganizing in the spring, the Quincy Republican City Committee has organized local volunteers to assist Republican candidates seeking state and national office.

In addition to organizing weekly phone banks for Republican presidential nominee John McCain, committee members have assisted former FBI officer Jeff Beatty in his race against John Kerry for U.S. Senate.

The committee has, also, conducted a card and letter drive for wounded U.S. soldiers and launched a new web site and blog to keep area residents informed on local, state and national political happenings.

Interested volunteers should call Jennifer Logue at 617-328-1384.

Scenes From Yesterday

Wollaston Boulevard

was replaced by a modern Hollywood styled SIMCO Ice Cream Roof Garden. After just one year SIMCO sold the property to Howard Johnson who moved his ice cream stand here on the corner of the newly connected Sachem Street. It was open there for almost 50 years. This is now the site of The Clam Box. The ladies in white were walking down what was known as the Strandway, still a public walkway to The Strand roadway below. 'Thank You' To All Involved In Babe Ruth World Series

I would like to thank everyone that helped out at the concession stand during the Babe Ruth World Series. It was a pleasure to see the fine people of Quincy showcase their hometown pride by volunteering in the various roles needed in order to make the Babe Ruth World Series possible.

People from across the country have spent the last week in Quincy and expressed just how wonderful their time here has been. This is because of the hard work and dedication of the volunteers.

There are too many of you to name individually, but please know that all of the board members of the 2008 Babe Ruth World Series, sincerely thank you.

Clarification On Kathy Hanabury Story

We were thrilled with the Kathy Hanabury remembrance in last week's Quincy Sun.

Just to clarify a couple of things; Kathy was an animal rights attorney. She and John McDuff, of the Quincy Animal League, together with the City Council, had passed the ban on elephants and exotic animals in the circus in Quincy in 1995.

The "Drago Test" was an entirely different case of hers.

Also, Ally Cat Allies of Washington D.C. created National Feral Cat Day each October 16 a few years ago; many years after Kathy's passing. We observe it and I know she would be overjoyed.

A 'Thank You' To The Park Department For Their Help

Although Ms. Griffin did an excellent job reporting on Sally Owen's 100th Environmental Treasures Tour in the Aug. 5 edition of The Quincy Sun, there was one minor point that should be clarified.

The trail was cut through the Woods by a team of about seven or eight volunteers from the Quincy Environmental Network (QEN). However, it would not have been completed without the assistance of the Quincy Park Department.

Under the direction of Kristen Powers and Steve Mancuso, several Park Department employees spent two days cutting back some very tall grass in a field area of the site. This tall grass should have posed a risk of tick bites to all those that attended the tour.

Thanks to their help there were no problems at all. We thank the Park Department for their assistance and for their continued support of Sally and her great work. They have been supporting her for the past eight years for all 100 of her tours.

87 Apply For 11 Quincy College Trustee Openings

By FRANK MCCAULEY

Eighty-seven candidates have applied for the 11 positions on the new Quincy College Board of Trustees.

A five-man appointing council was scheduled to select the 11 board members. The board must be in place by Sept. 1.

Mayor James Sheets' home-rule petition to establish a 13-member board of trustees as the new governing authority of the college was approved by the City Council, State Legislature and Governor William Weld earlier this year. (Editor's note: The appointing council selected 11 of the 13-member board. Two others, one a city councilor and the second, a school committee member, would be chosen by these bodies.)

KINNEY TO RETURN AS PARKING MANAGER, ANNUAL PROFIT TO THE CITY OF $185,000 SEEN
Barring unforeseen complications, Kinney Systems, Inc. of Boston will become the new manager of Quincy's parking system, a deal that could mean an estimated $185,000 annual profit for the city.

City Traffic Engineer Jack Gillon said that the city's parking operations recommendation committee voted to negotiate with Kinney, one of the three firms vying for the parking contract. The committee included Gillon, Richard Meade, David Colton and Bernice Mader.

Kinney held the five-year contract before Metropolitan Parking Systems, Inc. of Quincy, one of the two other companies that bid on the contract. The other was Fitz-Ann Auto Parts, Inc. of Boston.

Daily Phone Check Possibly Saves 80-Year Old Woman

Bellotti Urges Seniors To Enroll In 'Are You Okay' Program

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti is urging senior citizens who live alone to enroll in his "Are You OK?" daily phone check program after it possibly saved the life of an 80-year-old woman.

She was the 55th person helped by the free program since it was started in 2001.

The woman recently fell and injured her head and was unable to summon help for herself but a Bellotti staffer did when she failed to respond to the early morning call to her home.

Each morning, 365 days a year, members of the sheriff's staff place phone calls to about 300 elderly people living in Norfolk County who have signed up for the service.

If the staffer detects that something is amiss with the person, help can be sent immediately to his or her address.

"Time and time again, the 'Are You OK?' program has pre-vented tragedies by getting emergency help to people when they need it," said Bellotti.

"We have the capacity to serve so many more people with this service. No elderly person should be in fear of suffering a medical emergency and not being able to receive help."

People interested in signing up for the Are You OK? Service should contact the sheriff's office at 781-751-3504.

Local Chefs Will Host

Tasting, Cooking Demonstrations Friday At Farmers' Market

Local chefs and members of the newly established Quincy's Restaurant League will offer cooking demonstrations and tastings at noon Friday under the "Taste Quincy" tent at Quincy Farmers' Market.

The chefs use produce from Freitas and Stillman Farms, full-time farmers who serve Quincy and area residents.

The stalls at Farmers' Market offer corn, tomatoes, eggplant, melons, and a host of other garden produce that is freshly picked and superbly flavored.

According to Anneli Johnson, both the chefs and the farmers are working together in Quincy to celebrate the diversity and abundance of locally grown food and the city's restaurants through the newly formed Quincy Restaurant League.

The "Taste Quincy" demonstrations are being taped for Quincy Access Television which plans to offer a series on the chefs and food demonstrations later this year.

ing that drugs, liquor and gaming equipment were being used.

Ward 5 City Councilor Douglas Gutro said the plans called for an 81-seat sports, bar and grille that would serve over 100 people. Gutro said a "broad coalition" of residents, and business persons opposed the restaurant plan.

While he alluded to the flag incident and the "relatively recent raid," Gutro said there were only two decisive factors, "parking and traffic."

"We asked her to withdraw (the proposal)," Gutro said, describing the initial response.

Gutro called other issues "secondary issues." He noted that the Chinese United Association had changed leadership with a shakeup of its Board of Directors. Area residents and business owners had hoped, apparently in vain, that the Association would change.

In May, Gutro notified his constituents and business owners of the Chen's plan and called a neighborhood meeting. His first meeting on the proposal brought over 100 persons to Wollaston Methodist Church where he said, "It became clear that most folks opposed it."

Speakers "sent a pretty clear message that a bar and restaurant (would be) detrimental," said Gutro, stressing that the opponents covered a wide base representing businesses and neighborhoods.

Members of the Zoning Board of Appeals voting on the application were Michael Hanley, John Fagerlund, Robert Kachinski, John Brown and Fran Sandonato.

Chris, Trudy Blood Drive A Success

Charles Peter who was still recovering from knee surgery was among the volunteers.

Entertainment included dancers from the LaForest, Blodgett, Healy and McCarthy families.

Fiona Canavan, one of the organizers, thanked all the donors and volunteers and pledged to schedule another drive next summer.

At Two-Family HouseIllegal Hotel Shut Down In North Quincy

City officials have shut down an illegal hotel run out of a North Quincy two-family home operating so brazenly, they said, that it boasted its own website advertising room rates and other amenities.

Investigators found nine bedrooms set up like hotel rooms, with beds, refrigerators, televisions and hot plates in the two-family home at 139 Billings Rd. A court-ordered search warrant following an initial inspection revealed a number of safety violations, and officials ordered the alleged hotel shut down immediately.

"This type of illegal and dangerous operation will not be tolerated, period," said Mayor Thomas Koch. "We have to work together to protect our neighborhoods, and this is exactly the kind of activity that will be identified and eliminated."

After receiving information from neighbors about activity that resembled a rooming house, Koch ordered an investigation from a city task force. A team including Building Inspector James Anderson, Health Commissioner Andrew Scheele, Deputy Fire Chief Gary Smyth and Police Officer Greg Marr visited the home and were allowed inside by owner Kazaki Mase Wednesday morning.

Investigators noticed credit card displays, a front table with a computer, business cards, and tourism brochures. The business cards advertised a Japanese-language website, which when later translated to English advertised information about room rates and amenities such as mini-bar service, microwaves, cable television, rice cookers and Internet access in all rooms.

Touring the house, investigators found four locked bedrooms on the first floor and five locked bedrooms on the second floor, with a kitchen and bathroom on each floor. Mase opened all the rooms for officials, and they all resembled the hotel-style rooms and guests who were present acknowledged they were renting rooms.

Smyth said that smoke detectors found in the house did not work, and that fire safety overall in the house was "inadequate." The team asked Mase if they could visit the basement, but he refused. He did acknowledge that he was renting rooms.

After the initial inspection, Anderson cited Mase for several building code violations, including illegally changing the use of the two-family house. Koch's office directed city lawyers to work directly with the investigative team on more immediate action, leading to an administrative search warrant issued by Quincy District Court.

The warrant gave investigators access to the basement of the house, which was apparently used by Mase and a relative as living space, officials said. Investigators found a propane grill, a number of hot plates and a makeshift kitchen and bathroom with several code violations.

The team told Mase of all the code violations which needed to be fixed, and soon after confirmed the translation of the website, which showed clear evidence that the two-family home was being run as a hotel. Officials ordered the operation closed, and purported hotel guests were asked to leave.

All people staying at the house were able to find other accommodations and Mase and his family member were allowed to stay in the house. Quincy Police are expected to file a criminal complaint against Mase, the Mayor's Office said.

Zoning Board Will Hear Billboard Challenge Sept. 9

The Zoning Board of Appeals will hold two public hearings Tuesday, Sept. 9, on the 82-foot billboard erected in West Quincy. Both hearings will be held simultaneously at 7:15 p.m. as they both apply to the legality of the billboard.

The two challengers have opposing views of the billboard. Boston Outdoor Ventures, the company responsible for the billboard overlooking Willard Street, is appealing a June order by Building Inspector Jay Duca to dismantle the billboard.

The Board will, also, hear an appeal filed on behalf of Maloney Capital Co., LLC which challenges the city's original decision allowing the billboard, charging several errors in the decision.

The Maloney's appeal charges the misapplication of city ordinances allowed the billboard to be constructed on Biondi's Auto Center property.

Copeland Family Gives $1M To Milton Hospital

Milton Hospital has announced the receipt of a $1 million donation from the Copeland Family Foundation, completing the public phase of its Generations capital campaign with $3.6 million raised.

The funds raised will go to a new emergency department, two new and four renovated operating rooms, a new Pre-Admission Testing and Blood Drawing Center and a modern lobby.

"We are extremely proud and excited to announce that the hospital raised $3.6 million during the campaign," said Joseph V. Morrissey, president of Milton Hospital.

"The contributions from the community and staff at Milton Hospital very much support all of the great healthcare services the hospital provides the community."

The Copeland Foundation was established in 1983 by Charles L. Copeland and his sister, Ruth Capper, owners of the Milton Spring Beverage Company. The Foundation gave $1 million for an MRI Center in 2003.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

An Invitation

I am taking this opportunity to inform you of a program I just taped with Mark Crosby on QATV, where through the generosity of the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA) they have allowed us to air their video, FIREPOWER and add it to our discussion on home fire safety. I believe that this visual graphic, added to our discussion will enhance the effectiveness of our attempt at conveying the importance of a fire safe residence.

I first saw the video back in the 1980s when it was aired on Channel 5's Chronicle. It is the best visual depiction of an interior fire I have seen on tape. One of my primary goals in sharing it with you is to discredit Hollywood's typical depiction of a hero's ability to run through a fully involved fire scene, with near perfect visibility, returning to safety with only slight soot smudges upon their faces.

An actual interior fire atmosphere is anything but that which is typically shown in dramatic movies, but the NFPA has done justice in depicting the reality of a fire scene in their video, FIREPOWER.

This portrayal brings the reality of a residential fire to light, while we, you and I, have the choice to minimize and eliminate hazards in our homes through proactive fire prevention. Acting on that choice, will reduce the risk of a fire for us. Meanwhile, in the unlikely event a fire does occur, we must have in place, working smoke detectors to afford us the early notification we will need to evacuate, while we can plan and practice an evacuation plan prior to ever needing it as well.

That is the good news. Is a house fire a possibility? Yes. And are we empowered to do something about that? Absolutely! Ben Franklin's adage: "An ounce of prevention..." is as applicable today as it ever was then. You and I can take moments to make choices to modify our behavior to eliminate risk while maintaining the tools to assure safe evacuation in that unlikely event a fire does occur.

So kindly consider joining us in our effort at maintaining a fire safe community by taking some time to watch this program. It will be aired on our local cable network, Channel 10. It is titled: QFD: Fire Prevention & You, Topic: Fire.

It is scheduled to air Sept. 5 at 7 p.m., Sept. 6 at 9 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. and Sept. 7 at 9 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Meanwhile I want to once again thank the NFPA for allowing us to share their video with you while including it our own discussion on the subject.

As always, I want to thank Henry Bosworth and his staff at The Quincy Sun for making this column possible, otherwise, what would I ever do with my compelling need to spread the fire prevention message through the written word?

Thanks to Mark Crosby and the QATV staff for this new opportunity, sharing the fire prevention message through their medium as well.

And finally, thanks to our own Captain Bryan for his effort in obtaining this copy of FIREPOWER and the permission to use it on QATV. We will continue to use it to facilitate our efforts in serving you through our educational programs.

Be safe!

ally performed functions beyond those of an auditor.

Under Koch's proposal, the auditor would maintain his oversight function under the jurisdiction of the council.

"I fully support and respect the check of the Executive branch the auditor provides and also respect the City Council's authority over that position," said the mayor.

"This proposal does not change the core functions of the city auditor. In fact, I believe the fundamental oversight role will be enhanced because the city auditor will become an auditor in the truest sense of the word."

The move to a Municipal Finance Department is one of several Koch has made to make City Hall more "efficient, responsive and accountable" since he took office in January.

He made the Department of Constituent Services a part of the mayor's office and shifted responsibility for public buildings and major projects from the DPW to its own department.

The reorganization has required little new investment but has used existing resources in different way, said Koch.

"We are committed to changing the way City Hall does business and we are well on our way," he said.

"We are reviewing every department of the city to see how we can better serve our residents and that is a process that will be an ongoing part of our administration."

City Readies Major Flood Relief Projects

800-foot drainage pipe and redirecting storm drainage away from the backyards of Washington Street and Sixth Avenue.

"There is a tremendous gravity to these problems that I am pleased Mayor Koch recognizes. These folks have waited too long and suffered too much,"

Raymondi said.

"We have many of these critical projects throughout Ward 2, and the city, and I look forward to continuing working together with this administration," Raymondi said.

City engineers and consultants continue to review areas in other parts of the city, investigating current conditions, reviewing options, and prioritizing the most critical projects.

The Sixth Avenue project was to be presented to the City Council at its meeting Tuesday. If approved, as expected, work will begin this fall. The council has already approved the city's portion of funding for the Woodbine and Wesson project.

A Job Well Done

On Sunday, August 24, 2008, at approximately 3 p.m., Community Policing Bicycle Officers Declan Breslin, James Dentrement and Tom Ford were on patrol in the Quincy Center area during the Asian August Moon Festival. While in the area of Granite and Hancock Streets, the Officers observed a group of males standing on the plaza at the Stop & Shop Building. The officers knew two of the males from past encounters involving drugs. The Officers pedaled their bikes over to the group and as they neared, the males split up and walked in different directions.

LT. DAN MINTON

Officer Breslin followed a male known to him, who he believed to have warrants because he had removed an electronic bracelet from his ankle. The electronic bracelet is installed to limit the movement of a defendant to his home. He was carrying a black bag over his shoulder. As the male walked behind the Stop & Shop building, he reached into his left pocket as if to remove something. Officer Breslin pulled in front of the male and noticed that he was sweating profusely. When asked what he was reaching for, the male said he needed his "Charlie" card to get on the train. As the male pulled out his card, a hypodermic needle fell to the ground. Officer Breslin asked the male why he had the needle, and the male responded that it was not illegal to have a needle. Officer Breslin asked the male if he had any drug paraphernalia on his person and he responded that he did not, then gave the Officer permission to search him. Officer Breslin, concerned about other needles in the suspect's pockets, asked the suspect to remove contents of his pockets. The suspect removed several foreign looking bills, some loose change and a bottle cap which contained a brown substance believed to be heroin. Officer Breslin asked the suspect his name and he said it was David. Officer Breslin knew this to be a false name. The suspect then fled, running towards Hancock and Granite Street.

The Officer radioed a description and direction of flight to other Officers. Officers Dentrement and Ford, who had just released the other males, sped over on their bikes and were able to apprehend the suspect at the Ross Garage on Granite Street. A warrant check on the suspect's actual name showed that he had several default warrants. The suspect was placed under arrest and an inventory search of the black bag revealed a woman's pocketbook that contained various amounts of antique silver coins. There was also a laptop computer and a plastic bag, which contained a green herb substance believed to be marijuana. There was also a wallet with business cards for a carpentry company. Officer Breslin called the phone number on the card and asked the man if he was missing a computer and coins. The victim said that he was not at home but would go home and check immediately. The victim called back and confirmed that his house on Bigelow Street was broken into through a front window. He further stated that in addition to his computer several bags of antique coins were missing. The victim came to the station and identified the property as his. The suspect, a 22 year old Quincy resident was charged with "Possession of Class A Drug, Possession of Class D Drug, Receiving Stolen Property", along with the default warrants. Detective Rick Wash then responded to Bigelow Street to meet the victim and gather any evidence available. This evidence would be vital to prove that the suspect actually broke into the house, rather than just charge him with possession of stolen property. Detective Wash determined that the suspect used a screwdriver to prop open a front window lock and after gaining entry, the suspect lowered all the blinds to conceal his presence. Detective Wash dusted the area for fingerprints and then went to the kitchen area where he observed a black fire type safe sitting on the counter. The victim said that the safe had been moved and then forced opened, but unfortunately the victim had handled the safe, eliminating any good prints. The tool used to open the safe was placed into evidence and will be printed. Other evidence obtained was a screwdriver believed to have been used by the suspect to force the window, as well as a blue jewelry box and a tin altoid mint box reported to have been handled by the suspect and left on the bed. Detective Wash learned that the victims knew the suspect. They had invited the suspect into their home many years ago. Detective Wash also detected that the suspect may have urinated on the curtains at the front door prior to him leaving the home. The suspect refused to comment on this. The property taken as evidence will be submitted for DNA and print analysis and if there is a match, the suspect will be charged with breaking and entering too. PAST BREAKS AND ATTEMPTED BREAKS: Quadrant Circle, Hyde Street, 200 block of Fenno Street, Weston Avenue, 300 block of Copeland Street, 300 block of East Squantum Street, Elm Avenue, Berlin Street, Glendale Road, Main Street, Pond Street, Schlager Avenue, Monroe Road, Taffrail Road and Butler Road.

YUMMY ROSE HIPs are here for the picking at Wollaston Beach, according to Brian Cassie of Boxboro, an international naturalist. Cassie's father, the late Lawrence Cassie, was a lifelong resident of North Quincy where his grandfather, the late Alexander Cassie, emigrated in 1928.

WOLLASTON MUDFLATS became a wonderland of nature for some 22 campers who are shown testing the mud during their field trip. International naturalist Brian Cassie (center) led the tour. The Wonders Of Wollaston Mudflats Intrigue Naturalist

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Wollaston mudflats might be just a mass of black mush with an occasional pungent odor to local residents.

To international naturalist Brian Cassie, Wollaston Beach offers a much different story.

Wollaston at low tide is a wonderland of nature, according to Cassie who brought 22 campers to the mudflats last week to enjoy the view and collect specimens for classroom study.

"The mudflats are great," said Cassie who has written 14 nature books and is a recognized authority on tropical ecology, Arctic animal life, seashells, birds, butterflies and New England natural history.

In the past, he has led the "Binocular Tours" through the rainforests in Costa Rica, Belize, Mexico, Venezuela and Jamaica. Last week, he came to Quincy.

"We're here to see the mudflats," Cassie said of the youngsters who swarmed onto the beach, squishing through the mud on crocs and barefeet.

The youngsters, from a landlocked town north of Boston, are studying marine life at summer camp with Cassie as Program Director. They fired dozens of questions at Cassie about the mudflats, the birds, the marine life.

One asked why the water was squirting him through the holes in the mud; others scooped up shells and snails and asked for names.

As they walked, Cassie pointed to the birds and gulls above, "Hey, look, there's a snowy egret."

He, also, identified a ring-billed gull and a ho ha ha gull that issues a call like a human laugh.

"They go ho, ha, ha," said Cassie.

"There are a lot of interesting specimens," Cassie said as he pointed to specimens of the soft-shelled clam, the mussels, spider crabs and mud snails. They are all readily plentiful on Wollaston Beach.

Before Cassie crossed the seawall to board the yellow schoolbus and leave, he picked what looked like a tiny cherry tomato from the wild rose bushes at the edge of the beach.

"They're yummy," Cassie said, offering one of nature's treats to the reporter. Cassie said the fruit of the wild rose is actually a "Rose hip" and not only safe to eat but, "delicious."

(According to Wikipedia, rose hips can be used to make herbal tea, jams, jellies, herbal pies, bread, marmalade and other items and are rich in vitamin C.)

"My father was a North Quincy guy," Cassie said of the late Lawrence Cassie who lived in Quincy all his life. In addition, his grandfather Alexander Cassie arrived in Quincy from England in 1928 and worked at Fore River.

Much of Cassie's work is aimed at opening the world of nature to youngsters through words and pictures. His first book, "The Butterfly Alphabet Book" was co-authored with Jerry Pallotta.

Other books include "Shells," and The National Audubon Society's "Field Guide to New England." In addition, he has served as author-in-residence at a new Hampshire school and president of the Nuttall Ornithological Club at Harvard University and the Massachusetts Butterfly Club.

For Dee And Many Others

Interfaith Social Services: A True Friend To Those In Need

By MIRIAM JOSEPH

Ten years ago when Dee was diagnosed with a heart condition and then lost her job, she had no where to turn.

Then she read a newspaper item about Quincy's Interfaith Social Services, and she saw a ray of hope for herself.

Dee is not her real name but her story is real. "The woman with whom I first met at ISS made me feel so comfortable...it was like 90 pounds off my shoulders."

A lifelong Quincy resident now in her late forties, Dee was working in law-enforcement and was a certified nursing assistant when, because of a condition which obstructs blood flow into the heart, she was forced to apply for Social Security disability.

Although she was a single woman, her deceased brother's eight-year-old son had long been in her foster care; his mother had signed away her parental rights.

"For the first eight years everything was great, I was able to give the child everything he needed. Then this happened, and my world just crashed."

A woman of intense pride, it was difficult for her to approach anyone for help. But the lag time for state and city services, such as housing and Social Security can be upwards of a year, and she needed assistance immediately.

"The state doesn't just give you help like this, you have to fight for it, get a lawyer...same thing with housing, you're on a waiting list...and SS always denies your first application...you have to get a Social Security lawyer."

Enter Interfaith Social Services, which has been a full-service social agency serving families in need in 10 South Shore communities since 1947.

When Dee first came to ISS' Pantry Shelf, which today provides food to more than 4,700 households annually, she was shedding tears of shame. Then Bettyanne JANET DUGGAN of Weymouth and her granddaughter, Hannah, volunteer at Interfaith Social Services' Bureau Drawer, a thrift shop offering clothing, accessories, books, toys, and household items to the general public. The shop generates funds to help run the agency's programs, but can also provide items at no cost to individuals in need. The Bureau Drawer is open to the public Wednesday through Saturday and donations are welcomed.

Lang, an 18-year veteran of the organization and now Manager of Material Assistance, rescued her.

"I actually cried the first time I came to ISS' food pantry," said Dee. "I was embarrassed to be here... then Bettyanne said, 'Don't be ashamed to ask for help, none of this is your fault... let us help you.' I got food, vouchers for milk, and stuff."

ISS Executive Director Laura Stracco discussed the agency's three programs which focus specifically on the needs of low income individuals: The Pantry Shelf, which provides food; The Career Closet, which supplies workplace attire to women entering the workforce; and HomeSafe, a financial assistance program which assists families with costs of heat, utilities and rent.

The agency is experiencing the negative effects of today's economy. There has been an increase in requests for financial assistance and for groceries, with upwards of 450 families per month benefiting from the food bank.

The economy has also impacted the ISS' fundraising efforts, since many of the organization's donors and supporters are facing similar downturns. The Boston Food Bank and a few local supermarkets, like Stop & Shop and Hannaford contribute regularly to The Pantry Shelf.

Pantry Shelf manager Bettyanne said, "We have countless individuals who come in and drop off groceries, people who don't even want to be thanked, faith communities, businesses, schools, fraternal organizations, they all participate and all pull together at holiday time."

Many of the people who come to ISS just need some guidance and advice. Lang said, "They don't know what direction to go in, one of the special things about Interfaith, we work as a team to help the client in the best way we can, and when we can't, the kindest thing for us to do is to find another source that's best for them."

After nearly two years, when Dee finally secured

NORTH QUINCY HIGH SCHOOL student Lindsey MacPherson volunteers at Interfaith Social Services' Pantry Shelf, which offers non-perishable food items for families in need. Meat and produce are also offered when available. Distributing free food to low-income individuals since 1975, the pantry is open weekday mornings, providing necessities to more than 6,700 South Shore households annually.

CHICKIE ABDALLAH MANS the phone lines while Pantry Shelf Manager Bettyanne Lang and volunteer Cindy Lee tend to record-keeping at the Interfaith Social Services, 105 Adams St. Providing emergency assistance to those in need since 1947, the agency, which serves residents of all faiths on the South Shore, is supported by gifts of individuals, businesses, organizations and faith communities.

Quincy Housing, it was an emotional move. "I grew up in the projects as a kid...I fought my way out of there, I was one of only five out of 78 such girls who graduated from high school. I had been on my own and self-sufficient since I was 17, so to go back to the projects was very difficult."

Because of the outstretched arms, which greeted her at ISS when she needed them, she herself now volunteers as often as possible, as does her 18-year-old son, who she legally adopted in 1996. College-bound, he graduated from Quincy High this year with honors and scholarships.

"I offered my time back to ISS...at the Pantry, during holidays, Christmas drives, making up Thanksgiving meals-people can get a complete frozen turkey dinner, boxed up, for those with a home to cook in."

Dee says that "giving back" has changed her life around. In 2005 she gave up her Quincy housing apartment to someone whom she described as less fortunate than herself.

MATTI LANG PREPARES a box of groceries for a family in need at Quincy's Interfaith Social Services, a private, non-profit agency serving people of all faiths on the South Shore. The Pantry Shelf offers non-perishable food items and meat and produce when available. Although some local grocery stores donate daily bread and other products, much of the food must be obtained from the Greater Boston Food Bank, or purchased directly by the agency from grocery stores.

She has rented a three-bedroom home with a girlfriend, and was, therefore, recently able to provide a foster home for two brothers, aged 12 and 15, whom the state did not wish to split up.

"I didn't want the boys to whom I am foster mother now to grow up in the projects...I wouldn't be able to do this in the projects-that is against the rules, and there just wasn't enough room-we had a small, two-bedroom apartment for my son and me."

Of the many people and organizations who donate to ISS, Dee comments, "It goes to a worthy cause, no child should be left without a Christmas...there is a Santa Claus in my book. When I am here at Christmastime, no matter how bad things are, you can just feel it, the giving, and people are there for you.

"There is help, don't be ashamed to ask for it, no little child should go without a Christmas, even if it is just a couple of toys... your world could change because of your giving."

ISS also offers counseling services by trained, licensed therapists to individuals, couples and families dealing with life issues, with their HomeSafe program works closely with families at risk of homelessness.

As with all non-profit agencies, fundraising is key, and one of ISS' resources is their neat and well-organized thrift shop, "The Blue Drawer." Run by volunteers, it is open to the public and gratefully accepts donations of clothing and miscellaneous household goods.

Dee has apparently been teaching her son and foster children the same values she has learned over the years about giving back to the community.

"We help serve food at Thanksgiving time... my whole family has done Cleaner, Greener Quincy for five consecutive years. And the two boys in my foster care just received recognition for 22 hours of community service for The Salvation Army.

"My heart is full...the more I give, unselfishly, the better my life has been-just by them (ISS) helping me, turning me around, instead of my saying 'Oh, poor me'...there are avenues of help out there."

Balky Thermostat Is Grime Victim

Q. My house thermostat — one of those older, round kinds where you twist the dial to the temperature you want — doesn't seem to work right. It cools the house down to a freezing temperature, then lets the temperature climb back up until we're sweating. I can't figure it out — Harry S., Greenville, S.C.

A. Simple low-voltage thermostats, like the one in your home, are pretty darn reliable and can last for many years. They do pick up a few quirks, however, when grime builds up on the bi-metal coil that acts as the temperature sensor. The coil expands or contracts as the temperature changes, so if it's dirty, it may not expand or contract properly.

You can easily check the condition of the thermostat. Turn off power to the thermostat at the circuit panel and remove the top cover of the unit. Use a circuit tester to make sure no power is flowing through the unit. Turn the dial to its lowest temperature setting. Then inspect the coil, contacts and wire connections. Sweep away dirt with a soft brush (an old watercolor brush will work). Turn the dial to its highest temperature setting to reach the rest of the coil.

While the cover is off, make sure that the wires connecting the unit to the heating/air conditioning system are securely wrapped around their terminals (the little screws behind the dial). Loose connections can be re-wrapped using needle-nose pliers.

One of the nice things about having an older, low-voltage thermostat is that you can easily swap it out for an electronic thermostat, which runs on the same low voltage and so can be hooked up with the same wires as the old thermostat used. Electronic thermostats give you the advantage of precise temperature control and can be programmed to minimize heating or cooling when you aren't at home — saving that much more money.

A Great Way To Expand A Home's Living Space

(ARA) - Is what used to be your office now the baby's room? Have your desk and computer taken up residence in the formal living room? Are you running out of space to store your growing collection of stuff?

Now that summer is here, it's a great time to reassess how the space in your home is being used. And if you're looking for more creative ways to utilize the space you already have, look no further than the backyard deck - specifically underneath it.

"Expanding a home's outdoor living space is a big trend, and so many newer homes have second or third level decks with space underneath that is basically lost. Utilizing this normally wasted space in the home is easier to do than you may think," says Don Garrison of LockDry Decking.

While typical wood decks have gaps between the boards, providing no shelter from the elements for the area below, those that utilize a watertight aluminum decking system like the one offered by LockDry (www.lockdry.com), can create a beautifully finished and gapless deck that keeps the area under the deck dry, no matter what the weather.

Whether you need extra space for storage, a game room for the kids, a workshop or an entertainment room, the lower level is instantly transformed into usable space when you seal the deck above; and keeping the area dry isn't the only benefit aluminum decking offers over wood and composites.

"Aluminum is the perfect material for decking," explains Garrison. "It is able to withstand the most extreme outdoor elements. It does not rust, rot, warp, or splinter. It will not freeze and crack. It does not contain any chemicals that will leach. It also weighs less than half of wood decking and is much stronger."

Installation is simple, and since the decking surface is watertight, no water penetrates to the deck framing, protecting the wooden structure, and your house, from moisture. Kits, which are available directly from LockDry, include trim for a professional, finished looking deck.

Aluminum railing systems are also available to complete your deck. The various styles will complement just about any architectural style, from contemporary to traditional. Choose from cable, glass, picket and decorative styles. They are shipped in pre-assembled sections for easy installation.

In addition, the decking is maintenance free, so you'll never have to replace a rotted, cracked or warped board again. You also won't have to spend a perfect summer day waterproofing, staining or painting the deck. All it takes is periodic cleaning to keep the deck looking great. The aluminum decking stays cool to the touch, has a textured, non-skid powder coat finish, and is available in four beautiful colors, so there's sure to be an option that complements the color scheme of your house.

Once your deck is finished, there's no end to the ways you can decorate it. Add potted or hanging plants - the water runoff won't harm your aluminum deck like it would wood. Add a table with an umbrella and comfortable chairs, and you're set to enjoy the nice weather. The deck is also the perfect place for your grill, as most decks are built off the kitchen. Add some benches for extra seating, and you're ready to entertain.

Each LockDry decking system comes with a limited lifetime warranty. For more information, visit www.lockdry.com or call (800) 711-1785 to request a brochure and decking samples.

Either Quincy Babe Ruth Or Quincy Youth Baseball Decision Due Soon On City's Babe Ruth Charters

By SEAN BRENNAN

The recent confusion over which baseball organization in Quincy, Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc., or Quincy Youth Baseball, is officially sanctioned under Babe Ruth Baseball, Inc may soon be decided.

According to Mark Matanes, Babe Ruth MA State Commissioner, two charters were granted to the geographical area of Quincy three years ago; a mistake that has caused the uncertainty in the city as to which of these two organizations holds an official Babe Ruth charter.

At the present, both organizations hold an official charter, but that is soon to change.

"We have just one official charter under Babe Ruth, Inc. for the city of Quincy," said Matanes. "Three years ago, somehow Quincy Babe Ruth and Quincy Youth Baseball were both granted charters, which was a mistake. But as of February 2, 2009, and on the condition that Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc and President Dick Lombardi met the requirements necessary to receive the charter, including fielding at minimum four teams with 48 players, they will be the official Babe Ruth league in Quincy."

In a letter sent to Lombardi and Sandy Verhault, President of Quincy Youth Baseball, from Matanes on August 25, 2008 discussing the results of a Babe Ruth, Inc meeting on August 23, 2008 at the Marriott Hotel in Quincy, it was decided that "effective Feb. 2, 2009, one 13-15 Babe Ruth charter would be assigned to Quincy, MA zip codes 02169, 02170 and 02171 and that this charter would be granted to Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc and to Richard Lombardi as League President."

The charter would be granted to Lombardi subject to the approval of a written plan submitted by Lombardi to the State Commissioner (Matanes), which calls for the reorganization and restructure of the Quincy Babe Ruth program. According to Matanes, this plan must include a statement that "no 13-15 players, regardless of ability, will be denied an opportunity to play Babe Ruth baseball."

And the letter concluded with the understanding that, if the requirements were followed and put into place by Quincy Babe Ruth baseball, this charter "for 2009 shall carry with it an option for Quincy Babe Ruth, and Mr. Lombardi, to host the 2010 15-year-old Regional Babe Ruth Tournament."

Present at the meeting on Aug. 25, 2008 was Mr. Robert Faherty, Commissioner, Babe Ruth Baseball, Inc., Mr. Norm Messier, New England Commissioner; Mr. Richard Roy, Asst. Regional Commissioner and Matanes.

Matanes added: "We have to rectify this situation to help end any confusion about Babe Ruth in Quincy. The city is supposed to have just the one charter and providing that Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc. meets the requirements put forth by us, the charter will belong to them."

Tryouts for Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc. will be held on September 20 at Adams Field, Quincy. The 13-year-old age group will be on the field from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and the 14-15-year-olds will tryout from 1-2 p.m. Anyone wishing to register for this league may do so on Sept. 20 before tryouts begin.

Tryouts for Quincy Youth Baseball begin Sept. 13 & 14 for Cal Ripken Major at Quarry Hills from 9-11 a.m. for 10-year olds and 11 a.m. to 12 noon for 11-12-year olds.

Tryouts for players aged 13-15 start Sept 27 & 28 at Adams Field, Quincy. 13-year old tryouts are from 9 a.m. to 12 noon and 14-15-year olds will tryout from 1-3 p.m.

O'Connell-Thomson Basketball Tournament A Huge Success

The 3rd annual John O'Connell-Dave Thomson Basketball Tournament was recently held at the Fenno Street basketball courts, and for the third straight summer, the event was a huge success.

The tournament is held in the memory of John O'Connell and Dennis Thomson, standout athletes who graduated from North Quincy High School in 2002 and whom both had their lives cut tragically short in the past four years. Both men's families have set up memorial scholarship funds in their names to benefit NQHS graduates.

namment, featuring a number of current local college basketball players, as well as many of the top former and current schoolboy players from Quincy.

For the second straight year, Dave Jaehnig, a Quincy resident and the captain of the Westfield State basketball team, led his team to the championship. Other Quincy residents on the championship team included Mark Jaehnig and Ross Pasquantonio.

The women's team captained by Quincy resident and Newbury College player Katelyn Mark captured the women's championship. Other Quincy residents on the winning women's team included Sarah Shea, Shauna Kelly and Juliana Eagles.

Thanks to the generous

Step Aerobics Without the Sore Knees

Q. One of my favorite group exercise classes used to be step aerobics, but over time it began to bother my knees. My gym just started offering these classes again, but I'm worried about hurting my knees. Is there a right and wrong way to do step classes?

A. Step group-exercise classes were extremely popular in the past and are again becoming more and more integrated in group-exercise classes. The concept of using a "step" for cardiovascular and strength training is now being used in a combination of group exercise classes, and even though we step up and down each day as we walk through life, there are ways to ensure you are not injured during step classes.

Concerns about hurting the knees are very common in step classes. Many adults deal with achy, sore, tired knees all day, and the last thing they want to do is stress already bothered knees. To keep this from happening, you can take precautions.

First, choose the appropriate height of risers under the step you are using. A step that is too high for your height and leg length can add unnecessary stress to your knee. Many people want a higher step to add more intensity to their workouts; however, a too-high step can cause pressure on the knee and hip, and over time can cause pain or injury.

A proper step height would be with the knee at approximately a 60-degree angle when one foot is on the step. When starting out, you can use a lower step, but the 60-degree angle should be your maximum step height.

Second, while stepping, it is important to step at a distance that is only one shoe length behind the step. Before beginning, place your toes touching the step and step back one shoe length. Notice how far you are from the step, and while stepping down, be sure not to step back any farther. It may take a little time to get used to this motion, but you want to make sure you are stepping up and not forward.

Another tip is to make sure you are stepping up on the step with your heel first and making sure your whole foot is on the step without your heels hanging off the edge. Landing on the step with your toes first can keep you from standing up completely and also can put added stress on the knees.

Be sure to speak with the step-class instructor beforehand about all of these proper stepping techniques to keep you safe. Stepping is great for cardiovascular and strength conditioning, and with proper technique, you can keep stepping toward your goals.

Always consult a physician before beginning an exercise program.

Back-To-School: Homework For Parents, Too

(ARA) - As teens head back to the classroom this fall, they'll be assigned a lot of homework in the three "Rs": reading, writing, and arithmetic. Important to students' success will be the homework parents do in teaching two other "Rs": role modeling and responsibility.

"A parent's words and actions provide powerful role modeling," explains Lonnie Carton, PhD, director of teen and family resources for the Web-based "Warm2Kids" program and an advisory panel member of the "Family Talk About Drinking" program. "They teach teens what kind of behavior is expected of them and how to make good decisions.

Responsible decisions include obeying the law and not getting involved in underage drinking."

Although some parents think peer pressure is the major cause of underage drinking, the fact is parents, not peers, have the greatest influence on their teens' choices related to this issue. According to the 2008 GfK Roper Youth Report(TM), 71 percent of teenagers 13 to 17 say their parents are the No. 1 influence on their decisions about whether to drink.

"Parents who communicate with their sons and daughters regularly, openly and honestly on a variety of issues find it much easier to talk with and listen to them on sensitive subjects like alcohol," Carton advises. "At the start of this new school year, I encourage mothers and fathers to take the time to sit down with their children. Discuss expectations, and emphasize the importance of making wise choices not only about underage drinking but about all other decisions."

Carton offers these guidelines to parents for remaining a positive influence in the lives of teens:

Be Factual. Give teens the facts about underage drinking in a calm, clear manner. Simply say something like, "It's against the law for anyone under 21 to use alcohol; our family obeys the law and we expect you to do the same."

Know Your Child's Friends and Their Parents. Being aware of other families' values and rules will help you better understand what pressure your child's friends may be putting on him or her.

Get Help if You Need It. Be aware of any changes in your teen's behavior or attitude such as suddenly doing poorly in school, hanging out with a different group of friends whom you don't know, or becoming disinterested in sports, music or other activities which once meant a lot, etc. If such changes occur, seek professional advice right away.

Seconds That Could Save Your Life

By DR. JAMES LIN and DR. CLIFFORD GLUCK of Milton Hospital

It seems like every time we turn on the TV these days there's another commercial about prostate problems. But what is the prostate and why do so many men have problems with it? Doctors James Lin and Clifford Gluck of Milton Hospital answer commonly asked questions about this issue, and share what every man should know about good prostate health.

Question: What does the prostate do?

Answer: This small gland makes a fluid that activates sperm and provides protection against infection.

Question: Why are prostate problems so common?

Answer: As we age, changes in our body may cause the prostate to grow, and cause health problems such as difficulty urinating. In addition, these changes put our bodies at risk of prostate cancer. In fact, the most common cancer in men is prostate cancer. Fortunately there are easy tests to screen for such problems.

Question: Isn't frequent urination a normal occurrence as we age?

Answer: Actually no. Urinary problems may be a sign of a cancerous or benign (noncancerous) enlargement of the prostate that can cause blockage of the bladder. If you are having any urinary symptoms such as slow urinary stream, going to the bathroom several times a night, or trouble emptying your bladder, tell your doctor. You don't need to suffer with these symptoms. There are many ways to fix these problems with medication or other treatment options. The earlier they are caught and treated, the better the success rate of treatment.

Question: I feel fine. Why should I have a prostate exam?

Answer: It's important to be screened for prostate cancer, no matter how healthy you feel. One in seven men will develop prostate cancer in their lifetime. In the early stages of prostate cancer, there are no symptoms whatsoever. The earlier it is caught, the better the chances of successful treatment.

Question: I'm nervous about the screening. What does it involve?

Answer: Your doctor performs two tests to check prostate health: a digital exam that takes just a few seconds and a blood test. The digital exam involves the doctor inserting a finger into the rectum momentarily to feel the prostate for bumps or anything unusual. It might feel slightly uncomfortable but it's over in seconds and does not hurt.

Your doctor should also take a blood test that checks the PSA levels in your blood. PSA—which stands for prostate-specific antigen—measures the level of protein in the blood produced by the prostate. A high PSA level is an indicator of the possibility of prostate cancer.

Question: Why can't I just have the blood test and skip the digital exam?

Answer: Some patients have a normal PSA reading but still have a lump in the prostate. That's why these two tests together are the best way to catch and treat prostate cancer in its earliest stages.

Question: When should I begin having screenings?

Answer: All men should have prostate exams starting at age 50. However, if your father, brother, or uncle has had prostate cancer, ask your doctor to begin screenings at age 40. If you are African American your screenings should also start at age 40.

Question: How is prostate cancer treated?

Answer: Oftentimes the prostate is removed. Today there are new minimally-invasive surgeries that drastically reduce recovery time, pain, and side effects to a man's quality of life. Years ago removing the prostate required open surgery, which required a six-week recovery time and sometimes caused erectile and urinary problems.

Today, there is a new robotic technique—using a machine called the da Vinci—that enables the surgeon to spare the nerves. This protects a man's ability to experience sexual activity normally, and prevents uncomfortable problems such as incontinence.

Making small incisions, the surgeon uses the da Vinci machine to look into the body with a high-resolution camera. This actually enables the surgeon to see areas of the body that would be difficult to see during an open surgery. In this way, the robotic machine improves the precision of the surgery being performed.

Question: What is the recovery like for patients having this type of surgery?

Answer: Usually patients can go home from the hospital within one to two days. Recently, a young patient in his 50s went through this surgery. The day after surgery, he looked great. He was sitting up in a chair watching TV, and greeted me with a smile. He said he was feeling good, and the pain was nothing like what he expected. That is a wonderful patient experience.

Question: What is the best thing I can do to protect my prostate health?

Answer: Eat a healthy, low-fat diet. Also, foods with lycopene contain protective antioxidants that are believed to lower your risk of prostate cancer. Lycopene is found in cooked tomato foods like marinara sauce.

Most importantly, ask your family care practitioner for regular prostate cancer screenings. Doctors today consider cholesterol and blood sugar tests routine parts of a physical, but they don't always include a prostate test. Ask for this quick and easy test. It could save your life.

CONCERNED ABOUT YOUR BREATH?

Many people have concerns about bad breath, particularly in social situations. While many breath odors stem from certain foods, smoking, dieting, and "morning breath," chronic halitosis (the medical term for bad breath) is less common. It can stem from problems involving the teeth, gums, and tongue. For instance, even relatively mild gum disease can be the source of malodorous breath, as plaque and its hardened form, tartar, create pockets of infection. Heavy bacterial plaque can also form on the back of the tongue to putrefy and generate a variety of sulfur and other odoriferous compounds. Fortunately, bad breath can be effectively addressed with professional dental care once an accurate diagnosis is made. Good oral health habits can contribute to reducing and eliminating halitosis: brushing and flossing daily as well as regular professional cleanings performed by our office. We ensure you that we use all of the available tools to make and keep your mouth healthy. All of our patients are individuals, and will receive care specifically geared to their needs. Our office is located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where we will treat you with dignity and respect. Please call 617-479-6220 if you'd like more information or to schedule a checkup. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Tongue scraping and prescription rinses are usually effective in treating halitosis caused by compounds at the back of the tongue.

Brought to the U.S. as an ornamental and prized by beekeepers, the invasive giant hogweed was found to cause severe skin burns when its sap contacts skin and then is exposed to sunlight. Even blindness can occur if the toxins touch the eyes. Anyone finding them must avoid them completely and notify authorities of their location.

SCOTT DEWARE

A THOUGHT
FOR THE WEEK

Many people are afraid to face their troubles and problems head on. They often feel, if they ignore the problem, it will either go away or eventually correct itself. But not problem corrects itself. Nor does it normally go away. Many times problems are like snowballs ... they just keep growing and growing...

Someone once said that trouble makes us better or bitter. ... Let's think upon this ... The words "better" and "bitter" differ in only one letter, but it is significant that the one letter is "i." "Better" becomes "bitter" when the letter "i" crowds out the letter "e." That mischievous little letter "i" causes no end of troubles in life. When "i" crowds itself into any situation, take care. ... Starting out as "i" it will quickly grow into "I"; beginning with a little assertion of self, it will end up at last the giant of selfishness which rules our every mood.

Couldn't it be said that when people think of their troubles in terms of self, of how much they are being persecuted and misused, then the letter "i" gradually wins out and a sorrowful experience leaves them bitter?

Try to forget yourself in the midst of your sorrow. Think of how your troubles have spilled over and afflicted someone else. And remember the loving God who on the cross showed that He shares our sorrows.

How Do Tobacco Smoke And Car Exhaust Compare?

Like petroleum combustion exhaust, cigarette smoke is a very complex chemical mixture that contains volatile, semi-volatile, and non-volatile compounds, the latter associated with particles. Some 400-500 gaseous compounds and 3500 particulate phase compounds have been identified in cigarette smoke.

Similarly, gasoline and diesel exhausts contain hundreds of gas phase compounds, although not all of the compounds present are identifiable. Despite many analytic studies, vehicle particulate matter has only been partially analyzed. Still, of the fraction analyzed, hundreds of organic compounds and many inorganic compounds have been identified in exhaust particles. More appear as the particles age in the atmosphere.

Many of the known toxic compounds in tobacco smoke are also emitted from combustion of petroleum hydrocarbons, so there is significant overlap in the lists of compounds that have been identified in these mixtures to date.

The key difference is that tobacco, being a biological cal product, contains much more nitrogen than does crude or refined petroleum, in which nitrogen is rare. Thus, tobacco and tobacco smoke contain several classes of nitrogen-containing chemicals that are not present in petroleum fuels and their exhausts.

Some of these are toxicologically important, associated with bladder cancer and other health effects. Thus, there is only a partial parallel in chemical composition, and some of the differences are sure to be important ones.

Following are two lists. In the first list, Table 1, are groups of toxins that are found in both tobacco smoke, and petroleum vehicle exhaust. This list is not intended to be comprehensive; it is focused mostly on carcinogens and other important toxic substances.

The second list identifies some classes of chemicals that are associated with tobacco smoke, but not exhaust. Again, important compounds from a toxicological point of view were selected.

The list in table 2 isn't perfectly exclusive since a few of these compounds were identified by the International Agency for Research on Cancer as possibly present in diesel exhaust. However, the carcinogenic nitrosamines derived from nicotine are a very important difference.

There are also some groups of chemicals that are present in vehicle exhaust but not tobacco, such as hopanes and steranes, but little to nothing is known about them toxicologically.

Compound or Chemical Class	Health Effects of Concern
Alkanes (linear, branched or cyclic)	Many are relatively non-toxic, but hexane is neurotoxic
Aldehydes and other carbonyls (e.g. formaldehyde, acrolein, etc)	Respiratory irritation, cancer
Alkenes (e.g. 1,3 butadiene)	Cancer
Aromatic hydrocarbons (e.g. benzene)	Cancer, respiratory toxicity, reproductive toxicity, etc.
Polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons	Mutagenic and carcinogenic, immune system toxicity
Inorganic gases (carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide)	Respiratory and cardiovascular toxicity
Heavy metals (some detected in both mixtures)	Cancer, neurotoxicity
Acids (mostly organic acids)	Respiratory irritation and damage

Table 2 - Key Classes of Toxins Found in Tobacco Smoke but not Petroleum Vehicle Exhaust

Compound or Class of Compound	Health Effects of Concern
Aza-arenes	Possible cancer
N-nitrosamines (many unique to tobacco smoke)	Cancer
N-heterocyclic amines	Cancer
Some metals (e.g. cadmium unlikely in petroleum fuels)	Cancer
Hydrazine	Cancer
Pesticides and breakdown products	Various
Proprietary flavor additives	Unknown

BRAND NEW Science/Technology/Engineering/Mathematics Academy at Quincy High School, viewed here from the Huntley Road side, will be the first completed building in the complex to be occupied by students when they return from their midwinter vacation Feb. 23.

Following Midwinter Vacation

First Classes To Move Into New QHS Feb. 23

By TOM HENSHAW

The first new building in the $98.9 million Quincy High School complex will be completed in February and the first classes will be held there Monday, Feb. 23, when the kids return from the midwinter vacation.

"In February, we will move into the new Science/Technology/Engineering/Math Academy," said Principal Frank Santoro in his September message to parents.

"We will be saddened as we say goodbye to Quincy High School as we know it, yet we will be excited to be part of what it will become."

All of the students in the high school will use the newly constructed facility at one time or another as classes from the old school are integrated into a philosophy of education that crosses the lines of the various disciplines.

The transfer of the necessary equipment to the new school will be accomplished during the February vacation (Feb. 16-20) so it will be ready when the students come back.

"Half of the new high school is already built," said Santoro.

Eventually, the Quincy High School complex will be divided into three parts --- the Science/Math Academy, the Humanities/Arts Academy and a reconditioned West Campus, the old building.

The move into the new Science/Math Academy will enable work crews to begin demolishing the old Center for Technical Training to make way for the Humanities/Arts Academy.

That part of the complex is due to be finished in September, 2010.

Other moves have seen the library moved into the Lack Of Local Contests Reason For 20% Prediction

Light Voter Turnout Seen For State Primaries Sept. 16

A light voter turnout is seen for next week's state primary elections due mainly to a drought in contests at the local level.

City Clerk Joseph Shea believes no more than 20 percent-maybe fewer-of the 53,968 registered voters will cast ballots.

If so, it would mean about 10,600 going to the polls and more than 43,000 staying home.

There are only two candidates on the Democratic ballot-neither local:

Senator John Kerry, challenged by Edward J. O'Reilly and Governor's Councillor Christopher A. Iannella, Jr. is opposed by Stephen F. Flynn of Hull and Robert L. Toomey of Abington.

There isn't a single contest on the Republican ballot and only two candidates.

"You really need local contests to get voters out," Shea says. "There's none this year."

Unopposed next Tuesday are Democratic incumbents: State Senator Michael Morrissey, State Reps. Bruce Ayers, Stephen Tobin and Ronald Mariano.

Also without challengers are Democrats Register of Probate Patrick McDermott, former Quincy city councillor; Treasurer Joseph A. Connolly of Weymouth, commissioners John M. Gillis, former Quincy city clerk, and Francis W. O'Brien of Dedham.

Congressman William Delahunt of Quincy is also unopposed.

The only two candidates on the Republican ballot are Jeffrey K. Beatty of Harwich for U.S. Senator and Thomas E. Gorman of Dedham for county commissioner.

There are no Republican candidates for governor's councillor, state senator, state representative, register of probate and court treasurer.

Senator Kerry has his first Democratic challenger in 24 years in O'Reilly, a Gloucester lawyer, whose political experience has been limited to two years as a city councillor and two years as a school committeeman.

O'Reilly is Kerry's first Democratic challenger since he was first elected in 1984. His only major opposition since was Gov. William Weld, a Republican.

The expected turnout next Tuesday is considerably lower than that in the Presidential Primaries in February.

That turnout was 43 percent with races between Democrats Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton and Republicans John McCain and Mitt Romney the attractions.

Clinton took Quincy over Obama by a wide margin, 63 to 29 percent. Romney edged McCain here with a vote of just under 48 percent to 43 percent.

Quincy's 30 voting places will be open from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. next Tuesday.

Voters of Ward 6, Precinct 3 will cast their ballots at the former Beechwood Community Life Center, 440 East Squantum St., which will be open for the elections.

To aid Asian voters, Shea has printed posters listing the locations of the 30 polling places in Chinese and Vietnamese. They are being prominently displayed at the precincts and in windows of various businesses.

City's Solar Challenge Adds $10,000 To Clean Energy Fund

Quincy failed to meet the Solar Challenge earlier this year but the effort is being credited with adding more than $10,000 to the city's Clean Energy Fund.

Last spring, the city tried to increase the number of residents and businesses supporting Clean Energy Choice programs by taking part in Massachusetts Technology Col-laborative's Solar Challenge.

If it had increased the number of supporters by 150 before May 30, it would have received a free two-kilowatt solar installation.

The city failed its goal.

But the effort spurred nearly 100 residents and businesses to support renewable energy through GreenStart or the New England Green Fund. As a result, the Clean Energy Fund increased from $27,133 as of Dec. 31 to $37,326 as of June 30.

The Quincy Environmental Network cited five businesses for their support --- Holmes & Edwards, Inc., Steven Tobias Hearing, BU Medical Center, Wollaston Garden Club and Bates & Riordan LLP.

Billboard Site Draws Crowded Picket Line

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Mike DeAngelo's months-long vigil picketing the controversial West Quincy billboard is getting a lot livelier.

On both Friday and Monday, a half dozen neighbors and friends joined DeAngelo at evening rush hour on the Crescent Street picket line with signs protesting the 82-foot structure.

"It's an affront to the whole city," said DeAngelo who has been picketing the site since the billboard was erected last spring. "...as many days as I can."

"They don't belong in a neighborhood," DeAngelo said of the billboard, adding that the way it was done was, especially, offensive to the residents.

But this week, DeAngelo and residents weren't alone on the tiny sidewalk in front of Biondi's Auto Service.

Three of their opponents held signs Monday evening supporting the billboard.

One Biondi supporter, John Sautter of Whitman, carried a sign reading, "I Love Biondi's," with an insult aimed at DeAngelo penciled in at the corners.

At times, the Biondi supporters attempted to mingle with the protesters and that heated the emotions on both sides.

DeAngelo's group sought to alert billboard opponents to a Zoning Board Appeals (ZBA) meeting set for Tuesday after deadline. Board members are scheduled to consider two appeals filed by opposing parties challenging the city's decisions on the billboard.

Boston Outdoor Ventures, an affiliate a New York advertising firm, is challenging the city's decision to order the company's billboard dismantled while Maloney Capitol Co., LLC. is appealing the ZBA's original decision granting the billboard variance.

Among other issues, Maloney's appeal cites the two-sided nature of the billboard.

This week, both sides on the picket lines sought public support but there was no contest as opponents won hands down. Drivers honked their horns in a chorus of support, cheered out their windows, and gave the thumbs up signal to billboard opponents.

Pickets opposing the billboard included Michelle McGahey, Ross Stiffler, Safwan Eid, George Proto, Sean Campbell and Ryan DeAngelo.

BILLBOARD OPPONENTS Michelle McGahey and Mike DeAngelo hold signs asking people to "help take down the billboard." A Zoning Board of Appeals hearing was held Tuesday. Quincy Sun Photos/Laura Griffin

McGahey stood with her sign on Willard Street and predicted that hundreds would turn out at this week's ZBA meeting.

When asked why she was there, she replied, "I live on Crescent St."

In the past, residents of Crescent Street, Hall Place and Willard Street have filled meeting halls when the billboard issue has been discussed.

There are legal restrictions on billboards erected close to residential neighborhoods and there have been questions of whether the area is substantially business or residential.

The West Quincy neighborhood nearby has businesses, Biondi's Auto Service, and Curry Hardware, but, also, features a mix of Garrisons and Capes with a smattering of large Victorian homes as well as multi-family residences featuring coifed lawns and blooming flower gardens.

Sautter, a West Quincy native, said he was supporting Biondi's because they are a good company, "They did work on my car. They did a good job."

As for the billboard, he said, "It doesn't bother me. I moved out of Quincy."

DeAngelo has been picketing the Biondi's site regularly since late spring when the billboard was erected. The company sought to limit its picketing through a complaint in district court. The case was continued.

In addition, both DeAngelo and Biondi employees have filed criminal charges and counter-charges of assault against each other.

May Have Problem With Mailboxes

Council Plans Campaign To Rub Out Citywide Graffiti

By LAURA GRIFFIN

City councillors plan to battle the increasing incidence of graffiti defacing traffic signals, electric boxes, mailboxes, and private property through a clean-up campaign and the stepped-up criminal prosecution of vandals.

Their biggest challenge in the clean-up campaign may be the United States

Postal Service.

Mailboxes with their solid blue background provide one of the most attractive canvasses for graffiti, but postal officials may present the biggest obstacle in the clean-up campaign.

"We've reached out on two occasions to the Post Office," Jim Fatseas, the mayor's chief of staff said, adding, "The response hasn't been stellar."

The whole issue of postal boxes involves a Catch 22, according to speakers at the Sept. 2 council meeting. It's against the law for anyone other than postal officials to paint the mailboxes, but postal officials don't have the time or money to do the job.

In their first step toward attacking the graffiti problem, councillors voted unanimously to approve President Jay Davis's resolution calling for a meeting of public and private officials, ranging from the Department of Public Works and the police department to officials from Verizon, National Grid and the Postal Service.

However, Fatseas indicated that officials at the USPS can be implacable in protecting the government's control over mailboxes, right down to its paint. He described his futile requests to Quincy and Boston postal officials.

City Solicitor James Timmins outlined federal regulations regarding federal property. Strictly interpreted, only the postal service can paint the mailboxes.

"They have limited resources," according to Fatseas who said, "There are no easy answers."

"They only do a community once a year," said Davis, indicating that USPS only returns to each area on a designated schedule.

"I've been asking questions and not getting any answers," said Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi who later recommended that the city adopt a "judicial remedy" to deal with the post office.

"Leaving it (graffiti) on there is unacceptable," said Raymondi who suggested the issue could be resolved through city ordinances or building violations.

"They can't have it both ways," Davis said.

A WOLLASTON MAILBOX illustrates the work of graffiti vandals. Mailbox graffiti may be the hardest problem to solve.

Convention Vote Returns Mariano To School Board

State Rep. Ron Mariano is back on the School Committee after a three year break and expected to take his seat at Wednesday

Agenda items Wednesday included a vote on new school lunch prices as well as updates on both the new Quincy High School and sites for the Central Middle School.

A joint convention of the City Council and School Committee elected Mariano with a hefty majority of 12-1 with two voting presents on Sept. 2. City Clerk Joseph Shea administered the oath of office to Mariano immediately after the vote.

Mariano fills the vacancy created when Kevin Mulvey resigned last month after Mayor Thomas Koch appointed him as the school system's Human Resources Director.

Councillors and school committee members initially had a choice of three candidates, Mariano, Eileen Mullen and Karl Roos. However, Roos withdrew from the candidates' field through his nomination speech.

School Committee members Anne Mahoney and David McCarthy voted present while City Council President Jay Davis voted for Mullen. All other councillors and school committee members voted for Mariano.

In his candidates' speech, Mariano described his 12 years experience as a teacher and his 16 years serving on the school committee. He noted that he is a product of the Quincy public schools.

Mullen who placed third in the last School Committee election said the convention should choose the candidate who campaigned for the position and earned votes from the people in the last election.

Roos said he entered the race because people encouraged him after he'd been a candidate in the last Joint Convention. However, after assessing the situation, he said, "I decided to withdraw my name from nomination..."

"I think people respect and can relate to the fact that I have children in the schools" and "20 years of real world business experience."

"I have respect for Rep. Mariano," said Roos, adding, "He does a lot being the Chair of the Finance Committee (state)... I genuinely wish him well and hope he does an incredible job. Why wouldn't I want that? I have children in the system and plan on living in Quincy for a long time."

Looking for an investment that's guaranteed to grow?

What's the main problem with stock market investments and mutual funds? Simple – you just can't be sure that your money will grow. In fact, you can't even be sure that your principal won't shrink. And while no one would deny that market-based investments should at least be considered as part of a diversified investment plan, sometimes you have money you don't want to put at risk in any way. Maybe it's money you're going to need soon. Maybe it's your IRA or Roth IRA. Maybe you're a conservative saver who simply wants investments that are guaranteed to grow. We understand. Moments in time

• On Sept. 11, 1857, Mormon guerrillas murder 120 emigrants at Mountain Meadows, Utah. The guerrillas persuaded the emigrants that they had convinced nearby Piute Indians to let them go if they would surrender their arms. At a pre-arranged signal, the Mormons opened fire on the unarmed male emigrants, while the Putes reportedly murdered the women.

• On Sept. 10, 1897, a 25-year-old London taxi driver named George Smith becomes the first person ever arrested for drunk driving after slamming his cab into a building. Smith later pled guilty and was fined 25 shillings.

• On Sept. 8, 1900, a Category 4 hurricane rips through Galveston, Texas, killing an estimated 6,000 to 8,000 people as a 15-foot storm surge flooded the barrier island. The hurricane remains the worst weather-related disaster in U.S. history in terms of loss of life.

• On Sept. 13, 1916, Roald Dahl, author of "Charlie and the Chocolate Factory" (1964), is born in South Wales. In World War II, he joined the Royal Air Force as a fighter pilot and was shot down in the Libyan desert, suffering serious injuries. He saved a piece of his femur, removed in an operation after the accident, and later used it as a paperweight in his office.

• On Sept. 9, 1942, a Japanese floatplane drops incendiary bombs on Mount Emily, an Oregon state forest, in the first and only air attack on the U.S. mainland during World War II. The president immediately called for a news blackout for the sake of morale.

• On Sept. 12, 1963, "Leave It to Beaver," which had debuted in 1957, airs its final episode. The typical 1950s wholesome family comedy presented the lives of the Cleaver family from the perspective of 7-year-old Theodore "Beaver" Cleaver.

• On Sept. 14, 1975, Elizabeth Ann Seton, born in 1774, is canonized by Pope Paul VI at the Vatican in Rome, becoming the first American-born Catholic saint. She devoted much of her time to charity work with the poor. In 1856, Seton Hall University was named for her.

That No-Name One

Hurricanes now have names and we know when they are coming and where they are going, if they don't suddenly take an unexpected left or right hand turn.

Which gives areas in their path time to prepare for them and evacuate if necessary.

A lot different, say, than sneaking up on New England as that one did 70 years ago this Sept. 21.

You might say it was a bitch. Or a bastard. It had no legitimate name.

It's remembered simply as the Hurricane of 1938. But there was nothing simple about its fury.

There have been others here since. But they had real names like Carol, Diane, Gloria, Hugo, Bob, Bonnie, Danielle, etc. And we knew they were coming and had time to get ready.

Hurricanes prowling the East Coast were somewhat rare around 1938 and they weren't tracked from as far away as Africa as they are with today's sophisticated technology.

But this one slipped into the area when no one was looking.

Before it left, it claimed more than 600 lives in the New England area—fortunately none in Quincy—and caused millions of dollars in damage.

You could buy a pretty good house for something like $3,000 or $4,000 back then. Considering that, those millions of dollars in damage would translate into billions of dollars today.

The late Tom Burgin, mayor at the time, in an interview, remembered it this way:

"It came in around 5:30 p.m. We had no advance warning. It just arrived unannounced.

"Trees and wires came crashing down. Utility poles were scattered about. Windows in the stores downtown were blown in. Boats were torn loose off the yacht clubs.

"There were 3,900 trees down citywide and all the fire alarm boxes and police boxes were out of commission. There was no electricity."

Burgin called in the National Guard for the first time ever here in peacetime.

"We were afraid of the stores being looted. And we needed extra help and patrols in other areas," he said.

Squantum, Houghs Neck and Germantown were cut off from the rest of the city by mountainous high flooding tides.

Winds were 90 to 100 miles per hour with gusts at 120 or more.

"As I remember," Burgin said, "the eye of the hurricane came right over Quincy.

"It took weeks to recover and get back to normal. It was a horrible storm and certainly left a lasting impression on me. I will never forget it."

The East Coast in recent years has been spared Mother Nature's wrath as hurricanes like Katrina, Gustav and Hanna went elsewhere.

It wasn't until 1953 that the National Hurricane Center began using female names for hurricanes and in 1979 started alternating between female and male names. A little male equality.

But that no name one in 1938 is still one of the biggest and best remembered of them all.

Scenes From Yesterday

Boulevard and Aviation Grounds towards Squantum, Atlantic, Mass.

NINETY-EIGHT YEARS ago this week the Harvard Boston Aero Meet was held at the Harvard Aero Field in Atlantic. The Harvard Aeronautical Society had rented the 500-acre field for five years. They offered large cash prizes for record-breaking thrilling contests to lure the most daring aviators and the most advanced aviation equipment from around the U.S. and Europe to this meet. It was only the second aero-meet held in the U.S. and it was only seven years after the Wright Brothers' first flight at Kitty Hawk. Wilbur Wright was present but he did not participate. Among the over 50,000 observers who came to Quincy that week were President William Howard Taft, Mayor John F. (Honey Fitz) Fitzgerald and New York state senator Franklin Roosevelt. This postcard, looking north on the newly opened Wollaston Boulevard, shows a French-built Bleriot monoplane with Englishman Claude Graham-White at the controls. He won most of the contests at the event. Today, there is a Dunkin' Donut shop on the corner of the Squantum Causeway pretty much where the tent is seen on the left. Moswetuset Hummock is on the right. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

I was happy to read of the good work of the Hanbury foundation to save stray feral cats in your August 28

Time Out!

I have been a coach in the Quincy Babe Ruth baseball league for 47 years. I have been through good years and bad. I am both angered and saddened by what has been going on the last three weeks between Quincy Youth Baseball and the Quincy Babe Ruth League.

The situation is getting very nasty. There are a lot of rumors and untruths on both sides of this fight. There is coercion and threats directed at coaches and players. This pits base-ball leaders/coaches against coaches, parents against parents and players against players.

Teams are being split up. Separate registration and tryouts are a cause of all this. Neither side is winning, but the kids are the big losers out of all of this backstabbing. If this continues neither league will have full team rosters.

I hope someone of stature, not associated with either side will step forward and mediate this situation to a fair agreement for the players. I would suggest that tryouts for both sides be postponed until next spring. It will give a time-out until both charter decisions can be made.

One is due in the next month or so and another one in February. The tryouts for Babe Ruth were held in April for the first 35 years of the league's existence.

Maybe Mr. Lombardi can step down as Babe Ruth President and be appointed by Quincy Youth Baseball as permanent director of all Babe Ruth tournaments hosted by the city of Quincy?

'Go Back To School,' Former Mayor Urges Teens

By FRANK McCAULEY

"Go back to school boys and girls while you have the opportunity."

That was the message voiced by William A. Bradford, former mayor of Quincy, a civic-minded citizen and a man who for over 45 years has been either directly or indirectly identified with the education of youth. He was referring to the current "Go-To-School" drive, which is directed at keeping boys and girls in their upper teens in school.

Some of Bradford's most distinguished public service has been rendered in connection with his work on the advisory committee of the Quincy Trade School, of which he has been the sparkplug for many years. (Editor's note: Bradford served as Quincy's 16th mayor in 1921-1922.)

AMERICAN ARMIES SWEEP AHEAD AS NAZIS RETREAT TO HOMELEAND

American armies today fanned out through Alsace-Lorraine to within artillery range of Germany itself and approached and perhaps crossed the Belgian border on a 65-mile front.

Front dispatches predicted the Allies may cross into both Germany and Belgium this weekend, if they have not only done so. Belgian sources said a Belgian underground army nearly 1,000,000 strong has been ordered into action.

Independent Film Screening Tonight At Crane Library

From influential music video director Steve Barron, comes an extraordinary new independent film that encapsulates the contemporary immigrant experience in America. The movie, "Choking Man", will be screened tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public, 40 Washington St., Quincy.

Jorge is a morbidly shy Ecuadorian dishwasher toiling away in a shabby

Jamaica, Queens, New York diner. From his solitary kitchen corner, Jorge mutely pines for a bond with Amy, the newly hired Chinese waitress. On the job he is continually tormented by his coworker Jerry and at home he battles his inner demons. Set in the vicinity of the JFK airport, the most culturally diverse neighborhood in the world, Choking Man captures the feeling of claustrophobia newcomers to America experience as they struggle to find a place and purpose in this strange land.

Although not subject to rating by the Motion Picture Association of America, the film is not recommended for ages under 17 without parental permission.

The screening is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library. Call 617-376-1301 or visit thomascranepubliclibrary.org for more information.

Wonder Of Christmas Memories

Longtime Parade Goer Is Two-Time Theme Winner

Ms. Bonnie Ray, a longtime Quincy resident who has missed no more than three or four of the previous 55 Christmas Festival Parades in her hometown, has been judged the winner of the festival theme contest for the second time.

Her winning entry, "The Wonder of Christmas Memories," has earned for her a ride in a convertible along the three-mile route of the 56th parade, which will take place on Sunday, Nov. 30, this year, and a gift from the Christmas Festival Committee.

"I cannot get over the imagination of the people who plan and make up the floats," said Ms. Ray, whose previous win came in 1995.

"I can remember one year when my son was alive, in a wheelchair, completely dependent on me for his care when I took him to see the Christmas Parade, one of the clowns came up to him and personally gave him a balloon.

"The biggest smile came over my son's face, never to be forgotten."

George White, general chairman of the Festival Committee, said Ms. Ray's theme is ideal for the parade.

"It offers a wide scope of imagination for the float builders as they talk about and prepare their floats with the hope that they can win the Father Thomas Tierney Trophy," he said.

Father Tierney was the founder of the Christmas Festival Parade and the winner of the best float award annually receives the Tierney Trophy and a $1,500 cash prize.

Fontbonne Academy is Proud of Laura Rivero '05

Laura Rivero is a senior at New York University. A psychology major with a double minor in economics and business, she hopes to continue her education by seeking an MBA after college. Laura is a resident Assistant (RA) and a member of the Diversity Advisory board and the Student Enrichment for Academic Development (SEAD) executive board. She studied in Paris her sophomore year and involves herself in community service events such as "New York Cares Day" each year.

"Fontbonne Academy prepared me for college because it taught me to appreciate the gift of diversity. Being able to reap the benefits of a small, close-knit community at Fontbonne, my mission at NYU was similar — to find a community among a largely dispersed one. Involving myself in activities around campus and in NY developed my sense of community and leadership. Fontbonne solidified my values and provided me with a sense of leadership that has enhanced my overall college experience."

*Late Lee Ann Ryan To Be HonoredStar Of Sea Friends To Hold Cookout, Fundraiser Sept. 21

Friends of Star of the Sea, the little Squantum church that refuses to die, plan to take time out in their struggle to regain status as a parish to hold a celebration and fundraiser.

The cookout will be held Sunday, Sept. 21, from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. at the Robert I. Nickerson Legion Post on Moon Island Road. Tickets are $10 per person, $30 per nuclear family.

The cookout will follow the 12 noon Mass at the church, which is now a chapel administered by Sacred Heart Church and permitted to hold only one Mass a week on Sunday celebrated by a visiting priest.

"It's been a long time since Squantum parishioners have gotten together socially and it's time to celebrate the vitality of the Star of the Sea community," said Maureen Mazrimas, co-chair of the Friends.

The Friends will also take the opportunity to cite the late Lee Ann Ryan, a former Star of the Sea parishioner and Friends member, with the first Shining Star award. She died in February, 2007.

"We are excited to use this celebration as a time to present our first Shining Star award to a very special individual," said Sean Glennon, co-chair of the Friends.

"This award will recognize an individual whose 'behind the scenes' efforts contributed both to our first appeal and to our ongoing efforts to reestablish our faith community to full parish status."

"Lee Ann's energy and enthusiasm for this effort motivated others and inspired them to action," added Mazrimas.

The event will be a time for family, friends, food and fun complete with raffles and a silent auction for grownups and face painting, relay races, hula hoop contests and a "bouncy" ride for kids.

The menu will include hot dogs, hamburgers and sausages and participants are encouraged to bring their favorite dessert to share with others and enter the "sweet tooth" contest.

Top prize at the silent auction is "Lunch at the Lockup," lunch with Sheriff Michael Bellotti and 12 guests at the Norfolk County Jail plus a tour of the jail and transportation to Dedham.

Tickets will be available Sunday, Sept. 14, at 1 p.m. at John Nelson Park across the street from Star of the Sea Church.

Tickets will also be sold Tuesday through Thursday from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m., weather permitting, at the gun emplacement at the intersection of East Squantum Street and Huckins Avenue.

The Friends are seeking raffle and silent auction items, as well as sponsorships from individuals and businesses. Questions should be addressed to Maureen Mazrimas at 617-257-8295, or Sean Glennon at 617-909-66426.

The event will be held, rain or shine.

Quincy Community United Methodist To Celebrate 25th Anniversary Of Merger

The Quincy Community United Methodist Church, 40 Beale St., Wollaston, will celebrate the 25th anniversary of its merger with four churches beginning Saturday, Sept. 13 with a dinner dance and buffet dinner.

The merger included Adams Shore, Atlantic, Quincy Center and Wollaston who all came together in 1983.

Dr. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of the church said,

"This is a very significant milestone in the history of the church." "It's a time to honor the past, celebrate the present, and anticipate the future."

Rev. Tony Jarek-Glidden, husband of the pastor, will be the DJ for the dance.

Persons are encouraged to wear something silver to celebrate the spirit of the weekend.

On Sunday, Sept. 14, a special worship service will be held, which will include the histories and memories of the four founding churches. Memory books, compiled by Jeannie O'Connor, will be given to all who attend.

City Steps Up Police Presence At NQHS Intersections

The city has doubled the police presence at intersections surrounding North Quincy High School before and after school as plans for a long-term traffic overhaul in the area move forward.

"This is a priority for the school committee members, parents, and our administration," Mayor Thomas Koch said. "While we are focused on moving forward with a long-term plan for the area, it is important that we do everything possible in the near-term to make the intersection as safe as possible. This has been a problem for a long time, and we are acting to solve it."

In addition to a police officer stationed on East Squantum Street, Koch requested an additional presence on Hancock Street near the McDonald's restaurant and North Quincy MBTA station. On the first day of school police pulled over several cars that drove through a crosswalk, and are directing students to the safest areas to cross the street.

"We are there to ensure the drivers do what they are supposed to, and the kids do what they are supposed to, and it is showing clear signs of working," said Police Chief Paul Keenan.

Traffic Engineer Jack Gillon has added new signs in the area, placed pedestrian barrels on both Hancock and Squantum streets, continues to repair signal timing at major intersections, and is reviewing several other immediate options. His department has been working on a complete traffic study of the area as a precursor to major reconstruction project at the intersection.

"There is no silver-bullet in the near term, but with the help of state funding and continued work, a major reconstruction will help alleviate many of the historic problems in that area," Gillon said.

Mayor Thomas Koch will hold his first Mayor's Cup Charity Golf Tournament Oct. 6 at Granite Links Golf Club which will provide heating assistance for Quincy families.

Koch said fees to play in the tournament will be lowered this year from $1,000 to $600 for a foursome, which includes the 18-hole tournament and a dinner reception with a live auction, raffles and entertainment at Granite Links. Registration is now open, and sponsorship opportunities are available for Quincy businesses.

For sponsorship information, contact Chris Cassani in Koch's office at 617-

"This is a great opportunity for the community-business, government, and residents to come together and do something tremendously positive, and it will also give more people an opportunity to play in the tournament," Koch said.

Funds raised by the tournament will be used for fuel assistance grants for local families, and will be incorporated into an existing program coordinated by the City. All recipients will be qualified through state and federal guidelines to ensure that heating assistance goes to residents in the most need.

"A difficult economy often most affects those who can least afford it, and rising fuel costs threaten an extraordinary difficult winter for many Quincy families," Koch said. "With the help of our business community through sponsorships and the contributions of golfers, we can make a substantial difference."

Quincy Youth-Build Students Team With Red Sox In Renovation Project

Matt Miller says it was by far the best day of his life. The Quincy Youth-Build student got to spend last Saturday using skills he had learned in the program to help in the second annual Red Sox "Foundation Nation Community Service Day" - and to meet some of his favorite Red Sox players.

On that sunny August day YouthBuild students joined with four other Boston Coalition YouthBuilds in helping volunteers from the Red Sox Foundation, Covidien - the event's corporate sponsor - and local building tradesmen update Brockton Veterans Hospital recreational facilities Building 23.

With Miller were fellow student Ryan Serafini, YouthBuild Worksite Supervisor Nick Morganelli, Quincy Housing Authority Lead Carpenter Paul Curran, as well as staff members Darcy Corder, Isabel Cobb and Annette Owens from Training Resources of America, Inc., which operates the Quincy YouthBuild program, and Miller's mother, Debbie.

"Saturday's event was very rewarding. It was a privilege to take part along with the Red Sox Foundation and the Covidien volunteers. Everyone was energetic about helping the veterans and the current troops. It was a thrill of a lifetime to be part of such a wonderful event and very exciting to meet the Red Sox players," said Cobb, the Quincy site manager.

Some of the projects accomplished during the 6-hour event were: painting several interior and exterior doors; cleaning the patio and spreading gravel; cleaning pool area walls and heat grates; removing pool balcony theater seats to allow more storage; cleaning and painting the storage area; assembling and installing basketball court storage cages and painting cabinets; and replacing locker room storage cabinets.

On the baseball field and the surrounding courtyard, work included: planting shade trees by the field; leveling the pitcher's mound; applying chicken grit to the field; installing a new home plate; water sealing and placing picnic tables; removing weeds; and applying mulch around the courtyard perimeter.

MATT MILLER carries in a storage cage section to the Brockton VA Hospital basketball court.

Meanwhile other volunteers assembled care packages for soldiers overseas.

In addition, as part of their program, the students had come to the hospital three times before the event to work on the building.

"One of the nicest things was how the veterans were impressed with and very appreciative of what the boys had done," Corder said.

The Quincy YouthBuild Program is part of a national movement of over 200 YouthBuild Programs designed to unleash the positive energy of unemployed young people to rebuild their communities and their own lives with a commitment to work, education, responsibility and family.

In partnership with Quincy Housing Authority, Training Resources of America, Incorporated has operated YouthBuild programming in Quincy since 2001, serving over 150 youth.

Training Resources of America Incorporated is a private, non-profit organization that provides education, employment, training and workforce development ser-

Founded in 1975 and headquartered in Worcester, Massachusetts, TRA had several training sites in Massachusetts, Texas and other parts of the U.S.A. The Quincy site is located at 1458 Hancock Street. Daily Phone Check Possibly Saves 80-Year Old Woman

Bellotti Urges Seniors To Enroll In 'Are You Okay' Program

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti is urging senior citizens who live alone to enroll in his "Are You OK?" daily phone check program after it possibly saved the life of an 80-year-old woman.

She was the 55th person helped by the free program since it was started in 2001.

The woman recently fell and injured her head and was unable to summon help for herself but a Bellotti staffer did when she failed to respond to the early morning call to her home.

Each morning, 365 days a year, members of the sheriff's staff place phone calls

to about 300 elderly people living in Norfolk County who have signed up for the service.

If the staffer detects that something is amiss with the person, help can be sent immediately to his or her address.

"Time and time again, the 'Are You OK?' program has pre-vented tragedies by getting emergency help to people when they need it," said Bellotti.

"We have the capacity to serve so many more people with this service. No elderly person should be in fear of suffering a medical emergency and not being able to receive help."

People interested in signing up for the Are You OK? Service should contact the sheriff's office at 781-751-3504.

At Former Naval Air Base

Delahunt Sees Quincy As Home Port For Tourist Ferry Service

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Congressman William Delahunt envisions a marine highway for tourists visiting Massachusetts' history rich "Cultural Coast" with Quincy as the major port.

The hub of the ferry network would be the 50-acre Squantum Point Park, the site of the former Naval Air Base where a 250-foot pier already juts into the bay and where, day after day, nearly 1000 parking spaces sit idle.

"The potential is enormous. Quincy could be a gateway for a significant influx of tourists," said Delahunt of the park, currently under the jurisdiction of the state's Department of Conservation and Recreation (DCR).

Delahunt stressed that the proposal is still in the concept phase, but could include an extended boardwalk from Marina Bay, a National Park presence, and tourist trolleys to and from Quincy Center.

"Quincy would play a prominent role," Delahunt said of the project billed as a regional initiative for tourism.

One major appeal for Delahunt is that the key components, the solid pier and an enormous and empty parking lot, are already in place, at no cost, ready-made and begging to be used.

Delahunt called the site "an underutilized asset that coincides with our efforts to improve water transportation."

Delahunt and his team is currently meeting with Mayor Thomas Koch and state legislators and said an open meeting for residents will be scheduled in the fall.

He applauded the city's tourist initiatives in the past year and commended Koch and Mark Carey, Executive Director of Discover Quincy, for their success in boosting and handling the thousands of new tourists to the city.

"Quincy is being discovered," said Delahunt, adding that a ferry service would enhance tourism.

"I think it could be one of the most exciting efforts," Delahunt said, adding, "It could help in the transformation of downtown Quincy."

"We are so rich in history. We ought to have an historical trail," Delahunt said. The first step will be to compile an inventory of available resources and develop a plan with input from all levels.

CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM DELAHUNT

While some team members working with the congressman are hoping to kick off the ferry project next spring, Delahunt said they'll take all the time needed.

"I don't want to give out a time frame. Dates will be flexible," Delahunt said, noting that nothing should be rushed. "We want to have a seamless transition."

As an example of the potential, Delahunt suggested that tourists using ferry service to and from Boston and Squantum Point could easily visit landmarks honoring three presidents, John Adams, John Quincy Adams and President John Kennedy whose library is less than a quarter of a mile across the bay.

"It's almost as if it speaks out for access from the sea," Delahunt said of the Kennedy site, noting that tourists must now enter the library grounds by car or mass transit.

Delahunt, also, said it would be remarkably fitting that the Kennedy landmarks be visited by sea as the love of ocean and sailing is so much a part of the Kennedy legacy.

According to Naval historians, the eldest Kennedy brother, Joseph, was one of the 2,000 pilots who trained at Squantum Naval Air base for World War II.

The airport site, originally Dennison Airport, is rich in history, boasting some of the earliest air shows, including demonstrations by Wilbur Wright. Among the spectators at one air show was President William Howard Taft and Franklin Delano Roosevelt before his presidency.

Women pioneer pilots Amelia Earhart and Harriet Quimby, flew planes from Dennison Airport. Quimby was killed after a fall from her plane into Quincy Bay.

Delahunt believes there are dozens of regional destinations possible for a ferry line. He described key points on what he calls the "Cultural Coast" from Salem to Quincy to Plymouth and beyond.

According to Captain Mike Schiller of Boston Belle Charters, there are roughly 39 nautical miles from Salem to Plymouth and about 14.5 nautical miles from Salem to Quincy.

Tourists would be off the roads through this green initiative traveling North and South, noted Delahunt who said the ferries could keep going the distance to Provincetown and the National Seashore.

For shorter trips, Delahunt suggested ferries to the Harbor Islands or to nearby Houghs Neck where President John Quincy Adams left for Europe.

"The numbers of visitors to Boston Harbor Islands is dramatically less (than it should be)," Delahunt said, of the last count of 85,000 islands' visitors.

With the National Park Service edging toward its 100th anniversary in 2016, creating a tourist mecca in Squantum could celebrate the service in a special way.

AMELIA EARHART, a woman pioneer pilot, was a director of Dennison Airport which was renamed Squantum Naval Air Base during World War II. The base closed in 1953.

PIER AT SQUANTUM POINT PARK could accommodate a tourist ferry. The 250 foot pier was used to transport workers and equipment during the MWRA's Deer Island sewage project.

A massive waterfront park in Quincy would be ideal, according to Quincy's P. J. Foley who noted that the old airport site has 50 acres and, by comparison, Boston Public Gardens has only 25 to 30 acres.

Foley called the airport site now "a vast wasteland" with a field of ragweed and said he hopes there will be a pilot program by next spring.

He outlined a week of daily ferry travels that would allow tourists to visit Race Point at the National Seashore, visit the Harbor Islands another day, and the Adams and Kennedy sites, another day and fill their date book for weeks.

Foley cited the financial impact that tourism has had on Salem and suggested Quincy could outpace Salem easily if the project is properly done.

Salem's tourism has increased by 25% to 30% in the past year and many attribute that to the ferry service.

Another by-product of the ferry service would be a commuter service for residents, according to Foley.

"We can restore the wetlands," Foley said. Right now, he noted the walking paths do not run along the sea. An extension around the DCR's park could increase the boardwalk by approximately one mile, he said.

Foley would like to see the boardwalk continued even further, around neighboring Boston Scientific on Commander Shea Boulevard. That would increase the walkway roughly a mile and one half.

Everybody questions how the project will be funded, according to Foley who suggested the partnership could seek federal initiative funds as the project would improve "green alternative transportation."

Delahunt who has initiated the discussion calls the preliminary concepts "exciting," especially with so many of the essentials already in place. However, he cautioned, "This is very preliminary. I can't overstate we're open to input."

While the water ferries traveling to and from Boston could also attract commuters, that would not be the chief goal, according to Delahunt who said, "We don't want to inundate Marina Bay with traffic."

The DCR's official access route to Point Squantum Park is Commander Shea Boulevard.

For more information, call Delahunt's Quincy office at 617-770-3700.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Fire Prevention Miscellaneous

A couple of issues have been brought to my attention while I believe they are of interest for our own personnel safety and that of our property.

When leaving for vacation and amongst the confusion of attempting to do so, make certain the bathroom vent, if present, is shut off. We have had three recent fires where these vents were left running for days while the building was left unoccupied.

In the first instance, a granddaughter was using an unoccupied apartment and she left it for a number of days. When she left the unit, she never shut off the bathroom vent. The vent eventually overheated while molten plastic dripped upon towels and hamper below. These in turn ignited while in this instance a sprinkler head extinguished the resulting fire.

In another, the tenant had vacated a residential building that had been rented for years. Here again, the vent was inadvertently left on as well. Days later, the vent overheated extending fire to the combustible construction. The subsequent attic fire caused considerable damage.

Fortunately in the third instance an occupant detected the odor of an overheated vent and the occupant extinguished the resulting fire with a fire extinguisher. The fire department was called to confirm in fact that there had been no further fire extension.

Coincidentally, as I am writing this article in my office, another inspector is discussing another incident involving an overheated vent. Again, in this instance, the building was vacated. The good news being, the fire alarm system was activated by smoke and the fire department responded removing the hazard.

Lastly, we have witnessed recent instances where sidewall vents, also known as power vents are being occluded with bird’s nests. Sidewall vents are frequently used when chimneys are not present in or on a building. They are typically seen used with gas-fired appliances venting combustion gases to the outside. This state’s ‘Ni-cole’s Law’ was created when one of these vents was blocked with snow and the combustion gases backed up into a house killing a young girl.

In these recent instances, the bird’s nests will block carbon monoxide and other combustion gases from escaping to the outdoors resulting in the same hazard. Fortunately, a neighbor contacted us about this current problem, and we in turn contacted the homeowners informing them of the issue.

The birds have since been evicted and have now moved on, while the vents once again can function properly.

Thank you and be safe.

Squantum Seaside Gardeners

Daylily Planting Project Will Hold 10th Anniversary

The Seaside Gardeners of Squantum will hold the 10th anniversary of the Daylily Planting Project of the Squantum Causeway at noon, Saturday, Sept. 27 at Nickerson Legion Post, Squantum.

The planting portion of this project began on May 30, 1998 when over 200 people participated in the daylong event and planted 5000 daylilies.

Prior to the planting, Sally Erickson had raised concerns to club members about the neglected Squantum Causeway in 1996. The Seaside Gardeners membership agreed to seek approval from city officials for the beautification project.

The process took two years and included meetings with then Mayor James Sheets and City Councillor Bruce Ayers as well as appearances and meetings before the Quincy Conservation Commission, the DPW and the MDC. Included in the planning and design of the project were representatives of Marina Bay Associates and landscape designer Mary Smith.

At the time, there were only 15 active members of the club so many additional helping hands were need for the thousands of plantings. Thanks to help through radio, television and newspaper publicity as well as direct mail and personal flyer drops, over 200 people volunteered for the planting event.

Mark Crosby of Quincy Access Television documented the events of the day and received an award for the video he created.

Also, the South shore

District of the Garden Club Federation honored Sally Erickson for originating the idea.

Seaside Gardeners no long have the assistance of all 200 "Friends of the Squantum Causeway" but the lilies still bloom in abundance, thanks to volunteers from the Norfolk County Sheriff's office.

These volunteers maintain the Causeway twice a year with bed cleaning and preparing for the summer and winter seasons.

All volunteers are invited to attend the celebration, including those who have been continuing the effort.

Marie Stamos is publicity chairperson for the Seaside Gardeners of Squantum.

Five Ways To Save Money While Improving Home Energy Efficiency

(ARA) - The warning letters have already started filling mailboxes across the country. This winter, Americans will face higher utility bills than ever before. While many will see their bills double, some costs will actually triple due to factors such as increased gas and oil prices and greater global demand.

While these factors are beyond your control, there are some steps you can take to improve your home's energy efficiency; and reduce your costs.

1. Improve your home's air quality and ventilation.

If your home does not have a ventilation system that provides for adequate air movement, add one that introduces fresh air to increase your comfort and adds to your energy efficiency.

Without adequate ventilation, your home's heating and cooling systems need to work harder, meaning more energy and more money is required. Furthermore, uncirculated, stale air allows moisture, odors and pollutants to linger in your home. However, there is a solution.

You can eliminate all these problems effectively with the addition of a spot

Energy Recovery Ventilator (ERV) which will provide tempered supply air, making the home more comfortable, while also efficiently yielding energy savings. The Panasonic WhisperComfort Spot ERV is the first ceiling insert ERV in the United States. It exhausts stale air from inside the home and replaces it with fresh air from outdoors, providing builders and homeowners with an affordable way to efficiently meet spot or whole house ventilation requirements.

WhisperComfort operation is designed to work two ways: "Spot Ventilation," which is suitable for a single room; or "Whole House Ventilation," which is suitable up to 1,750 square feet. The system features low-rate continuous run using two ducts -- one to exhaust stale air; and the other to supply fresh air from the outside. This practice helps ensure that indoor air pollutants are exhausted outside and replaced with fresh air -- helping to improve your home's indoor air quality.

In addition, the Whisper-

Comfort features quiet operation and has a frost prevention mode that automatically turns on when the outdoor temperature drops below 32 degrees Fahrenheit.

"We are dedicated to improving quality of life through sound environmental practices, and WhisperComfort offers spot or whole-house ventilation at a surprisingly low cost. In addition to the aesthetically pleasing grille design, this new ceiling-insert ERV can be easily installed during new construction or remodeling," says Dan Hogan, president, Panasonic Home and Environment Company.

For more information about the very affordable Panasonic WhisperComfort ERV, visit www.panasonic.com/ventfans.

2. Check the insulation levels in your attic, exterior and basement walls, ceilings, floors and crawl spaces. Visit www.energysavers.gov for instructions on checking your insulation levels.

3. Check for holes or cracks around your walls, ceilings, windows, doors, light and plumbing fixtures, switches and electrical outlets that can leak air into or out of your home. Caulk and insulate these energy wasting areas.

4. As appliances break down, replace old and inefficient models with ENERGY STAR rated units that require less energy to run. Also look for the ENERGY STAR rating when replacing heating and cooling systems.

5. Study your family's lighting needs and usage patterns, paying special attention to high-use areas such as the living room, kitchen and outside lighting. Look for ways to use lighting controls, like occupancy sensors and dimmer switches to reduce lighting energy use. Also remember to systematically replace incandescent bulbs as they burn out with more energy efficient compact fluorescent and LEDs.

A Job Well Done

On Monday, September 1, 2008, at approximately 11 p.m., Officers David Parisi, Jamie Green, John McIsaac, Ed Bagley and M.J. O'Brien were dispatched to the area of Waterston Avenue and Green Street for a disorder in the street with a person on the ground.

LT. DAN MINTON

Upon arrival, Officer Parisi observed a male party standing in the middle of Green Street with what appeared to be white paint sprayed across his face. There were also three young females huddled over by two men.

The officers interviewed all the individuals involved and received differing accounts from the white-faced male and the females, who were 19, 17 and 15 years old.

According to the females, they were just walking in the middle of Waterston Avenue when a male who had been sitting on the front stairs of a building approached them. The male appeared angry and started yelling at them, "Get the %^&$ out of here." The male then charged at them, throwing one of the females into some bushes and then to the ground. The other girls attempted to intervene and protect their friend, but they too were shoved. One of the girls spotted a can of spray paint in a trash can at the curb, so she grabbed it and sprayed the suspect's face white.

The suspect stopped when he was sprayed and the females fled down the street. Once the suspect cleared his eyes, he gave chase down Waterston Avenue and onto Green Street. The three females saw a house with lights on and several men going in and out, so they ran to them and asked them for help. The suspect stopped in the street when he saw the two men.

Officer Parisi then spoke with the suspect, who agreed that he was sitting on the front stairs of an apartment building when he observed the three girls walking down the street. He stated that he had seen them around before and believed that they were responsible for rocks being thrown at his building.

When questioned as to the basis of his knowledge, the suspect admitted that he did not have any substantial evidence to support his claims. The suspect said that he was sprayed with paint just after confronting the girls, but denied pushing them. He said he chased after the girls, who ran up to two men working on a house, but did nothing to them other than wait for the Police to arrive.

Officer Parisi then interviewed the two men, who were plumbing contractors preparing for the next days work. They said that they observed three girls running up Green Street being chased by a single male. The girls ran to them and stated they needed help. The men said that they feared for their safety and the girls, so they stopped what they were doing and instructed the suspect to stay where he was. The suspect said he refused to leave until the police arrived. Further investigation by Officer Parisi and other officers revealed that the suspect and the girls knew each other.

The girls admitted the suspect frequently purchases alcohol for them and their friends and had done so earlier in the night. The girls believed that the suspect purchased the alcohol from a liquor store in Wollaston. The girls were able to describe the color of the suspect's couch (orange) inside his residence. The officers then asked the suspect what color his couch was and he confirmed that it was orange. The girls told Officer Parisi that the suspect buys for neighborhood minors and has been doing this for some time. Based on the statements from the victims, the witnesses and the inconsistent information from the suspect, the 34-year-old Quincy resident was charged with "Assault and Battery, Disturbing the Peace and Disorderly Conduct". The information about purchasing alcohol for minors was forwarded to the Special Investigations Unit and the Community Police Officer for follow-up. Nice Work!

SPOTLIGHT

HEALTH and FITNESS

by Andrea Wyatt
M.S.S., C.S.C.S.Working Out
With Mom

Q. I enjoy working out four to five days a week at a local fitness center. Recently, my 80-year-old mother came to live with my family and me, and I would like for her to join me to exercise. She has never exercised in a formal gym setting before, and I am not sure where to start. Is she too old to begin to exercise, and where should I start?

A. Exercise is truly for every age. The type of exercise and the intensity can be modified to fit any age or fitness level. Finding the right exercise for your mother can allow her to join you working out.

First, speak with a physician and discuss starting of an exercise program. It is important to know the proper exercises and workout intensities to adhere to with your mother to lower her risk of injury. A beginner should always speak with a physician before starting an exercise program.

Acquainting new members to the fitness facility is an important step. Remember, your mother has not been in this environment before and will need to learn and feel comfortable with the layout, what is offered and what to do once there. It can be easy to forget how intimidating starting something new can be, and for someone who has never experienced this type of setting it can be quite confusing.

Many fitness centers use high-tech equipment — even to gain entry into the facility. Be sure your mother feels confident and that she truly belongs as a member of your club. Be patient and personally introduce gym's staff to your mother and explain her situation.

Inform the staff of your mother's new adventure and ask what programs they have available for her. Many facilities have classes for senior members, and not only is the programming appropriate, it also surrounds them with other members in a similar situation.

If your facility does not offer senior classes, and even if it does, I would suggest meeting with a fitness professional to properly introduce your mother to the exercise equipment and options for exercise for her individual situation. You may opt to hire a personal trainer for a period of time to help your mother safely begin to exercise.

Lastly, your mother may not be able to exercise four to five days a week initially; however, you can find other programs that may be of interest. Many facilities offer classes in the pool or other social-related activities. This can be a great way for your mother to meet other members and feel confident and comfortable in this area.

Sharing the exercise experience with your mother is a great gift and something that you can both do together. Although you may not complete the same exercises, you can both share the benefits exercising provides.

Always consult a physician before beginning an exercise program.

(ARA) - Each back-to-school season, parents arm children with tools necessary to build a lifetime of knowledge. But children need to develop more than their minds to lead a long and healthy life - they need to develop strong bones, too.

This year, parents can send kids back to school with the tools necessary to build strong minds and strong bones by following a handful of useful nutrition strategies. Ninety percent of girls and 75 percent of boys ages 9 to 13 do not get the 1,300 milligrams of daily calcium recommended, according to the National Osteoporosis Foundation. What's more, the majority of parents (60 percent) aren't sure how much calcium their kids get each day, according to a 2007 survey by independent research firm Opinion Research Corporation. More than 30 percent of surveyed parents mistakenly believed their children needed less than half of the daily recommended amount.

Parents have an opportunity to become better educated about bone health in order to effectively increase their kids' bone mass. Bringing bone-healthy foods into the home is one simple step parents can take to help their kids build and maintain strong bones.

Bone-healthy foods include foods rich in calcium, along with those enhanced with prebiotics - non-digestible, soluble fiber that can significantly boost calcium absorption by encouraging the growth of beneficial bacteria in the body. By choosing to bring foods into the home that are both rich in calcium and enhanced with prebiotics, parents can ensure their kids are on the road to a lifetime of healthy bones.

"Back-to-school season presents an opportune time for parents to help their kids build strong bones by providing them with bone-healthy breakfasts and packed lunches," says Coni Francis, Ph.D., a registered dietitian with GTC Nutrition.

There are an increasing number of kid-friendly, better-for-your-bones foods for parents to choose from, such as Barbara's Bakery line of Organic Wild Puffs cereals. Barbara's Bakery recently re-launched their tasty cereals with the added health benefits of NutraFlora, a natural prebiotic fiber. NutraFlora is one of the most effective prebiotics available, and is rapidly gaining awareness among parents and consumers for its ability to significantly improve calcium absorption.

In addition to serving bone-healthy foods, parents can help kids build and maintain healthy bones by encouraging them to exercise. Bones, just like muscles, become stronger through regular athletic activity. Most schools have a wide variety of organized athletics for kids, making back-to-school a perfect time for kids to start a new exercise routine.

Nature's Stress-Busters: Flowers

(ARA) - Feeling a little stressed? Need an energy boost? Buy some flowers. Taking the time to stop and smell the roses this summer could do more than you think.

According to a recent Harvard Medical School and Massachusetts General Hospital study, people who made a point of looking at flowers first thing in the morning reported feeling cheerier and even more energetic throughout the day. Amy Brightfield, Health Director, Woman's Day magazine says, "Combining the power of scent and colors that both relax and rejuvenate, flowers and plants are a fast and affordable pick-me-up this summer."

Beyond their physical beauty, flowers possess distinct sensory qualities that can boost energy, tame tension and brighten your mood. Essential oils derived from plants and flowers have been proven to increase oxygen flow to the brain, stimulating positive feelings that can balance energy levels or have a calming effect. These essential oils are often used in aromatherapy treatments to both soothe and stimulate the senses.

Here are some tips for choosing floral varieties and natural fragrances proven to help you de-stress and recharge.

Relaxation and Tranquility

Which flowers can help you relax and stay calm? By pairing floral scents with their rich natural colors, a number of floral varieties like lavender and lilacs can act as a relaxant and alleviate stress. Considered a natural remedy for a range of ailments, lavender's scent and lush color can prompt your body to produce a calming compound, improving sleep and promoting relaxation.

Lilac is another stress-relieving scent. This flower is found to have a calming effect, which can promote a feeling of well-being and also increase relaxation.

Bring color and tranquility to your life with these additional flowers:

*Relax with Bells of Ireland: Green, a calming color, can help you relax and breathe slowly and more deeply, all of which can help slow the production of stress hormones according to the Society of American Florists.

*Get a good night's sleep with delphiniums: The blue hue of this flower relaxes and naturally creates a soothing atmosphere that can help your body to wind down after a long day.

Awaken and Rejuvenate
For a floral pick-me-up, classic red roses, sunflowers and orange daisies awaken the senses and increase energy through their vibrant colors and potent aromas.

*Increase energy with red roses: Because the color red is energizing and we often associate the bright bloom with feelings of love, roses can work to boost mood and enhance energy levels.

*Enhance alertness with sunflowers: Bright and cheerful, the yellow hue of sunflowers enhances alertness by making those around them feel clear-headed and decisive. Since people generally associate yellow with the sun's rays and daylight, it's said to help people feel more optimistic.

*Convey confidence with orange daisies: The vibrant color of orange can convey confidence, show satisfaction and a passion for life.

Active Baby
Boomers More
Injury-Prone

Baby boomers are aging, but they aren't slowing down. The generation continues to stay active, working out regularly and taking up sports like tennis and golf.

Although these activities improve the health of baby boomers, it also increases their risk of exercise-related injuries. In fact, such injuries rose 33 percent for this generation over a seven-year period, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. In 2007 alone, 149,000 baby boomers were treated for exercise-related injuries.

According to Dr. James Keeney, an orthopedic surgeon and member of the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons, a 50-year-old is more susceptible to injury than a 20-year-old.

"Joints, tissues and muscles may not be as flexible as they used to be," he said. "So as you get older, you need to take extra steps to protect yourself from injuries when you exercise."

Instead of avoiding exercise altogether, baby boomers should take the some precautions to reduce their risk of injury during exercise.

First, warm up and stretch before you exercise. Just three to five minutes of warming up can prepare your muscles for a more strenuous workout.

Create a balanced fitness program, one that combines cardio, strength training and flexibility, to give you a total body workout.

Once you've created such a program, adhere to it throughout the week. Remember, moderate exercise every day is better than strenuous exercise on the weekends, which can increase your risk of injury.

Finally, listen to your body. Your body might not be able to do everything that it used to, so modify your workout according to your body's capability.

Maintaining an exercise routine as you age can help you avoid weight gain and reduce your risk of high blood pressure, depression and other health problems. So, listen to your body, and find a routine that is right for you.

TWO MINUTES OF YOUR TIME

If the milky buildup of bacteria laden-plaque is not removed from the teeth each day with brushing, it produces toxins that cause bloody gums and bad breath. In time, the bacteria in plaque will pull the gums away from the teeth to form pockets that fill with more plaque to cause trouble ever nearer the bone. The good news is that it only takes a minimum of two minutes of brushing to clean teeth properly. Yet, studies show that the typical American brushes for 37 seconds. This inadequate brushing time results in teeth that still have some plaque left on them. A daily minimum two-minute brush is all it takes to keep it at bay.

Presidents Comeback Falls Shy Against Cohasset

By SEAN BRENNAN

A gallant Quincy Presidents' comeback went for naught last Friday night at Veterans Memorial Stadium as Cohasset High School defeated Quincy 28-27 in overtime in the season opener for both teams.

The non-league opener for QHS and the first game on the sidelines for new head ball coach, Bill Reardon, went to extra time after the Presidents rallied back from a 20-12 halftime deficit with a long scoring drive in the second half. But the excitement ended within minutes of the overtime session beginning.

In high school football, both teams receive the ball on their opponent's 10-yard line with four downs to play with. Against Cohasset, the Presidents took the ball first and immediately scored on a 10-yard touchdown run by junior running back Ed Jolicœur. The point after attempt was successful and Quincy grabbed its first lead of the game at 27-20.

But the Clippers responded in kind. Running back Dana Valentine scored his own 10-yard touchdown, putting the score at 27-26. Playing on the road, the Cohasset coaching staff decided to go for the win, eschewing the PAT and going for the two-point conversion.

The calculated gamble paid off as quarterback Jeff Cavanaro completed a pass in the back of the end zone to receiver Brendan Doonan. The successful two-point conversion ended the game and saddled Reardon and his Presidents with a tough-to-swallow 28-27 loss.

The game began ominously for Quincy when Cohasset scored on its third offensive play of the game. The early blow was a 62-yard touchdown run that gave the Clippers a 7-0 lead.

But the Presidents responded with gusto. Junior quarterback Lance Peterson helped to lead Quincy on a 12-play drive; a drive that finished with Peterson throwing a 27-yard touchdown strike to top-receiver senior Anthony Raddatz. A missed PAT put the score at 7-6 Cohasset.

With momentum swinging back to the Quincy sidelines, Cavanaro led his team on a 17-play, 51-yard drive that ended when Cavanaro threw an 8-yard touchdown pass to give Cohasset a 13-6 lead. The PAT was good and with minutes to go in the half, the Clippers held a 14-6 advantage.

Things would only get worse for Quincy on its next possession of the half. A Clipper defender recovered a fumble and Cohasset turned that turnover into what looked like a backbreaking 60-yard touchdown that ran the score to 20-6.

But these Presidents don't give up. On the next play from scrimmage and during Quincy's last offensive possession of the half, the Peterson-Raddatz combination came through once again. Peterson fired a 70-yard touchdown pass to Raddatz down the right sidelines and, just like that, Quincy was back in the game. An unsuccessful two-point try closed the first half scoring at 20-12 Cohasset.

The halftime break seemed to settle down Quincy as the Presidents took their opening possession of the second half on an eight-play, 84-yard drive that saw them attempt to kill clock and maintain ball control. Out of the eight offensive plays called on this drive, only one was a pass attempt. Peterson ended the five minute plus drive with a seven-yard quarterback scramble into the end zone. A successful two-point conversion pass to Raddatz left Quincy and Cohasset tied at 20-20.

After Cohasset racked up close to 200 yards passing in the first half, the Presidents defense locked up in the second half, limiting the Clippers to very little on the ground and in the air, and holding them scoreless all half. This defensive intensity seemed to fire up not only the Quincy sidelines but also the number of fans in the stands.

This defensive pressure ultimately helped lead to the overtime session. With Cohasset holding the ball with under two minutes to play in the game and looking to score, Raddatz (2 TDs, INT) stepped in front of a Cavanaro pass, stopping the threat and sending the game into OT.

The Presidents play next this Friday on the road in a non-league contest versus Canton High School (7 p.m.). Quincy will be looking to avenge last season's 28-7 loss to Canton.

Following the Canton game, Quincy will play ACL foe Plymouth South at home before embarking on their 2008 Patriot League schedule on Oct. 3 against Rockland High School.

New Era For Quincy Football

Change is the common theme this season for the Quincy Presidents.

Instead of fans seeing a veteran coach Bob Noble roaming the sidelines this fall, a new field general will be there in his place. Bill Reardon, a member of the QHS coaching staff since 1995 and Noble's trusted defensive coordinator since 1999, began his own legacy last Friday night in his team's season-opener against Cohasset High School (see story).

The coaching change is just one of the major differences in 2008; another is that the Presidents, along with the North Quincy Red Raiders, have changed leagues, moving from the Atlantic Coast League to the Patriot League.

Quincy joins the 12-team Patriot League—a move that helps to alleviate the long bus rides to distant places on Cape Cod such as Dennis-Yarmouth, Falmouth and Nauset. But with the change in leagues, the Presidents have entered a powerhouse conference that takes its football very seriously.

Quincy has been placed in the Keenan Division—the Patriot League is broken into the Keenan and Fisher Divisions—and will have to cope with playing teams from Duxbury (9-2 last year), Hingham (11-2), Scituate (2-9), Silver Lake (6-5) and Whitman-Hanson (2-9). Not an easy task, but one Reardon hopes his team is ready for.

"I think the best part of changing from the Atlantic Coast League to the Patriot League is that we are looking forward to not going over the bridge," said Reardon. "The kids are also looking forward to playing teams from towns that are close to Quincy. The games will hopefully mean more because some of these teams and players may be familiar to our players.

"But it is going to be a challenge. Teams like Duxbury, Hingham and Silver Lake should be the top teams in the Keenan Division, but we will be very competitive. It is a tough league, but if we play like I know we can then we should be alright."

The Presidents, who will be looking to improve on their 3-7 record in 2007, return nine starters from last year's team including junior quarterback Lance Peterson, junior wide receiver Anthony Raddatz, senior tight end Sean Gray, senior wideout Mark Gilbody, senior linebacker Zack Manning, senior defensive lineman EJ Louis and senior defensive backs Pat Fernandez, Bryan McGee and Kenny Nguyen.

With the return of Peterson and his top receiving targets Raddatz, Gilbody and Gray, the offense is going to need to rely on an inexperienced offensive line to help carry the load and keep Peterson off his back. Plus, the offense is undergoing a change itself; no longer will the Presidents use the shotgun/spread formation used by Noble the last few seasons, but instead will be going back to a more traditional offense centered on ball control and clock management. Reardon, a longtime defensive coach, will be handling the offensive play calls this season.

On defense, assistant coach Kevin Carey will call the plays. This year, unlike season's past, Quincy will play in a 3-4 alignment (three defensive linemen and four linebackers)—a move away from the 5-2 alignment they used in 2007—mainly because of the talent and speed of this year's linebacking core.

Gray and junior James

Nguyen will start at outside linebacker and Manning and fellow senior Stefon Davis will play on the inside.

Nose tackle Aldo Vilena, along with Louis, are the stalwarts on the defensive line and in the defensive backfield Raddatz and Fernandez help to form the Presidents' last line of defense.

Last season Quincy finished strong with its ninth straight Thanksgiving Day victory over North Quincy (a 28-7 win), but the season as a whole was not that great. A 28-7 non-league loss to Canton HS was followed by an 18-6 win over Falmouth HS, but this win was followed by four consecutive defeats at the hands of Plymouth North (21-7), Whitman-Hanson (14-0), Marshfield (24-6) and Dennis-Yarmouth (31-7).

The Presidents got back into the win column with a week seven 35-21 victory over Nauset, but dropped back-to-back games against Plymouth South (27-0) and Sandwich (29-7). The 28-7 win over North Quincy not only made Coach Noble a winner in his final game, but also gave Reardon and his staff some needed motivation heading into 2008.

"I expect the same type of preparation from my team this year as they gave Coach Noble last year," said Reardon. "They understand that they have to give their all; at every practice and game. We have been 3-7 for the past two years and that is not good enough. We will never be out-worked if we do what has been set out which is: working as hard as possible at all times."

For most fruits, the best indicator of ripeness is flavor, but color can also help. Pears are picked at the hard ripe stage, and they finish ripening off the tree; the base color of a yellow pear changes from green to yellow as it fully ripens.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Creating a new approach to an old idea is one way to get beyond that workplace impasse. No such problems in your personal life, where things continue to flow smoothly.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Be more forthcoming about your feelings concerning a proposed change either in your workplace or in your personal life. Your opinions are valuable. Don't keep them hidden.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) A changing situation in your life needs more patience than you appear to be willing to offer. Allowing it to develop at its own pace is the wisest course you can take at this time.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) With more stability in your life — on both personal and professional levels — this could be a good time to strengthen relationships with both friends and colleagues.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) People have always relied on your integrity not only to get the job done, but to get it done right. So don't be pressured by anyone into cutting corners to save time.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) While others might get rattled over unexpected changes, your ability to adapt calmly and competently helps you make a positive impression during a crucial period.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A changing environment might be daunting for some, but the adventurous Sagittarius takes it all in stride. A friend from the past could awaken some meaningful memories.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) With your self-assurance rising to full strength, the bold Goat should feel confident about opening up to new ventures as well as new relationships.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Reaching out to someone who has been unkind to you might not be easy. But in the long run it will prove to have been the right thing to do. A friend offers moral support.

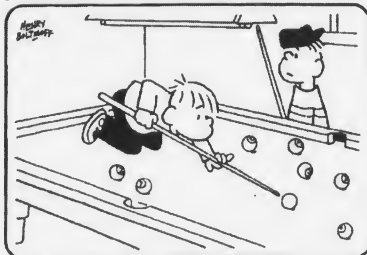

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Your keen insight once again helps you work through a seemingly insoluble problem in your workplace. The weekend offers a good chance to develop new relationships.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Are you a music lover? Do you enjoy concerts? If so, have you noticed that the man who plays the cymbals may not appear to have a very important part in an orchestra, but a symphony without the discordant clang of the cymbal somewhere in it would lack much of the majesty it was intended to have?

Have you ever noticed how cymbal players sit motionless throughout a number until nearly the end? . . . Then, as all the instruments are swelling into a grand crescendo, the cymbalist rises, poises his cymbals, and just at the right moment crashes them together and sends a peal of brass across the mounting harmonies of the orchestra. The cymbal does not make a tone; it creates a loud dissonance, but it thereby makes all the other harmonies significant.

And such is the function of disharmonies in life. They make the harmonies more significant. Pain, disappointment, hurts, and loss - the clash of cymbals in our lives - makes us remember and appreciate the times when our lives were more harmonious. . .

First Classes To Move Into New QHS Feb. 23

West Campus, art classes into Coddington Hall, formerly used by Quincy College, and the carpenter's shop into Broad Meadows Middle School temporarily while the Technical Training Center is being torn down.

The new Science/Math Academy will also include such old standbys as the Three Seasons Restaurant and the greenhouse as well as multiple computer labs, computerized blackboards, a 150-seat lecture hall and large screen projection in each classroom.

But to Frank Santoro, the February opening is more than just another new building of brick and stone.

"Our excitement goes beyond the new state of the art building," he said on his message. "What is most exciting will be the interdisciplinary approach to learning."

"Subjects associated with Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics will be taught in a way that exposes our students to the connections between subjects and meaningful, relevant experiences."

"Incorporating this educational philosophy with modern technology will make Quincy High School 'the beacon' in educational practices that others will follow."

Lenny Biondi, owner of the company and property, leased the billboard site to the New York advertising firm for 25 years. In the past, Biondi pointed out that he has donated thousands of dollars from the billboard receipts to the city's school and athletic funds.

Biondi, also, provided for the city to use the billboard space for municipal announcements. However the city council voted unanimously to decline the gift.

The billboard stands in Ward 4 represented by City Council president Jay Davis who has been criticized for his actions. Critics allege that Davis did not opposing the structure sufficiently and did not alert residents to the size of the billboard.

In a letter dated Sept. 2,

Davis notified residents of Tuesday's meeting. He cautioned his constituents not to expect any major or binding decision from the ZBA.

"After speaking with the City Solicitor regarding this matter, it is more than likely that no matter what the decision of the Zoning Board on September 9th, the issue will ultimately be decided in Norfolk Superior Court in the Massachusetts Land Court."

CUSTOM INSERTS FOR ATHLETES' SHOES

Orthotics for athletes' shoes are devices that can be placed in shoes to help with foot pain, posture, or a variety of medical conditions. Orthotics can be custom-made innersoles or more complex inserts. Types of sports and specific models of shoes need special consideration as they can make a major impact on the orthotics prescribed. Contours of arches of shoes can vary, as can heels, rims, and soles. If spikes or cleats are used, then the orthotics can often fit under the innersoles. Other shoes types don't allow for this, so the thickness of each orthotic has to be taken into consideration. Podiatrists can help prescribe the best type of orthotics for a patient's condition. We use today's high-tech diagnostic tools to fit orthotics, to detect foot imbalances, problems, and disorders, and to help determine the most appropriate treatment with more accuracy than ever possible before. We also use the most up-to-date materials for orthotics and other treatment modalities, always with the comfort of our patients in mind. Find out the many ways available today to keep your feet in the best of shape. Call us at 781-986-3668 for comprehensive, family foot care at QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221. I am affiliated with the Brockton and Good Samaritan Hospitals. P.S. Participating in sports can be made considerably more comfortable for athletes when orthotics are placed in the sports shoes.

Drug Task Force Plans Citywide Symposium Oct. 16

The Quincy Drug Task Force will hold a citywide symposium featuring state and local experts and a nationally renowned speaker Oct. 16 at 6 p.m. at Broad Meadows Middle School.

"Public awareness is a critical piece of our strategy to stem the drug problem in our city, and I believe this program will provide a great opportunity for the entire community to come together and begin asking questions and thinking about ways we can fight this epidemic," said Mayor Thomas Koch, who created the task force after taking office in January.

The program will feature a presentation by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health on drug abuse statistics in Quincy and the surrounding area to show the gravity of the issue in the city.

The presentation will be followed by a talk by Ginger Katz, whose son died of a drug overdose in the aftermath of the tragedy. She travels the nation presenting a message to parents that the stakes are too high to allow drug abuse problems to be ignored. There will be a question-and-answer session at the end of the meeting. Refreshments will be served.

The symposium comes as the 30-member Quincy Drug Task Force works on a series of recommendations it plans to submit to Mayor Koch in coming months. The group is a collaboration of elected leaders, law enforcement officials, educators, addiction specialists, human service agencies and residents.

Since January, the city has enlisted its first-ever team of drug-sniffing dogs at the Police Department, conducted drug sweeps at city schools for the first time in years, increased anti-drug education in the city's high schools, and continues planning for a series of additional steps based on the recommendations of the task force.

"The Task Force has worked incredibly hard over the last several months, and I look forward to their recommendations," Koch said. "This is not a problem that is going to be solved overnight, but this group has already shown that it is a battle worth fighting."

Minor QHS Fire Under Investigation

Fire officials are investigating a minor fire Sept. 10 in a lavatory at Quincy High School which caused the evacuation of the student body.

The fire in the boys' room in the West building was reported at 1 p.m. and extinguished by firefighters shortly thereafter.

As a precaution, Principal Frank Santoro dismissed all students at 1:15 p.m. that day. Santoro said investigators want to determine the cause of the small blaze.

Santoro said that officials want to determine whether the fire was started deliberately or accidentally by a student smoking. In either case, the student faces stiff penalties.

• Only 13.36 Percent Turnout

Kerry Fends Off O'Reilly's Challenge

Senator John Kerry turned back his first Democratic challenger in 24 years in the state primary Tuesday but his margin in Quincy was smaller than state-wide.

Kerry took 58.17 percent of the Quincy vote to Edward J. O'Reilly's 41.71 percent.

Statewide Kerry had a strong upperhand, 67.1 percent to 33.1 percent.

Kerry's Quincy vote was 3,811 to O'Reilly's 2,733 — a 1,178-vote difference.

With only two Democrat contests and no Republican, only 13.36 percent of Quincy's 53,957 registered voters bothered to pick up a ballot.

With one third of the precincts reporting in the Governor's Councilor 4th District at the Sun's press-time, Councilor Christopher A. Iannella was projected the winner.

In Quincy, Iannella breezed by his two Democratic challengers, Stephen F. Flynn of Hull and Robert L. Toomey of Abington.

Iannella's vote here was 3,001 (53.8 percent) to Flynn's 1,630 (29.22 percent) and Toomey's 919 (16.48 percent).

O'Reilly, a Springfield lawyer, was Kerry's first Democratic challenger since he was first elected in 1984. His only major opponent since was Gov. William Weld, a Republican.

Kerry and Iannella were the only two Democrats in primary contests Tuesday.

There were only two candidates on the Republican ballot, both without opposition.

Running unopposed were Democrat incumbents:

Congressman William Delahunt, state Senator Michael Morrissey, state Reps. Bruce Ayers, Stephen Tobin and Ronald Mariano, all from Quincy.

Also without challengers county-wide were Democrats Register of Probate Patrick McDermott of Quincy, Treasurer Joseph A. Connolly of Weymouth and County Commissioners John M. Gillis of Quincy and Francis O'Brien of Dedham.

The only two candidates on the Republican ballot were Jeffrey K. Beatty of Harwich for U.S. Senator and Thomas E. Gorman of Dedham for Norfolk County commissioner.

Beatty will face Kerry in the Nov. 4 Presidential election and Gorman will challenge O'Brien. Only one from the same community can serve as commissioner.

There were no Republican candidates for governor's councillor, state senator, state representative, register of probate and county treasurer.

The Quincy vote of the unopposed Democrat incumbents:

Delahunt (98.06 percent), Morrissey (98.29), Ayers (98.60), Tobin (98.04), Mariano (98.47), McDermott (99.03), Connolly (98.98), Gillis (67.04), O'Brien (32.10)

Community Welcomes Manet's New CEO Henry Tuttle

State and city officials this week joined leaders of the medical community in welcoming Henry Tuttle to the head post at Manet Community Health Center.

"He's done nothing less than hit the ground running," Alicia Gardner, Vice President of Manet's Board of Directors, said Monday during a reception introducing Tuttle to city and state leaders.

Among those on hand to welcome Tuttle were Sen. Michael Morrissey, Mayor Thomas Koch, Ellen Zane, President and CEO of Tufts Medical Center and former Director of Quincy Medical Center, Health Commissioner Drew Scheele, and John Brothers, Executive Director, Quincy Asian Resources Inc. and a member of the Board of Directors.

Gardner described Tuttle's success at his last position as chief executive officer of Outer Cape Health Services, Inc. where he instituted a successful turnaround plan.

Tuttle left the Cape organization with a "very high patient satisfaction" level of 90 percent and on "financially sound" ground, Gardner said.

In the past, Tuttle held management positions with private and public companies and agencies, including the Red Cross, major hospitals and Pacific Gas and Electric Co.

"I've been bitten by the primary care bug, really by the mission," Tuttle said of his decision to work in the community health field.

Tuttle cited Manet's new efforts in pediatric and prenatal care, goals for a residency program, new electronic record keeping and, even agency headquarters where a new roof has been installed.

"We are increasing our fund-raising (efforts)..." Tuttle said describing the agency's added emphasis on marketing, community and public relations as it "looks to the needs of the future." Tuttle reminded those attending that one of Manet's major fundraisers, the annual auction, is scheduled in mid-October.

The Fifth Annual Auction will be held Thursday, Oct. 16 at Blue Cross Blue Shield conference center on Enterprise Dr., No. Quincy.

Manet Community Health Center is a non-profit agency dedicated to providing accessible, quality comprehensive and preventive health care for all.

The 29-year old Manet Community Health Center opened its first site in Houghs Neck in 1979 and has since grown to operate at five sites, four in Quincy and one in Hull.

Last year, the agency served 15,000 patients through over 50,000 patient visits and, last Spring, Manet purchased its headquarters building at 110 West Squantum St., North Quincy.

Joseph Dunford, Jr. Promoted To 3-Star General Quincy Man Nears Top Of Marine Corps Ladder

By TOM HENSHAW

The teenaged kid who grew up in Quincy is now just one step below the rank of commandant of the entire United States Marine Corps.

Lt. Gen. Joseph F. Dunford Jr., 52, whose family lives on Narragansett Road in Merrymount, took on his third star the other day, the first Marine officer to go from one to three in a single bound.

Only the four stars worn by Commandant Gen. James T. Conway tops that rank.

Gen. Dunford, after a brief visit to Afghanistan, is presently the deputy commandant for Plans, Policies and Operations at Marine headquarters in Washington.

A native of South Boston, the future general was 11 when the Dunford family moved to Quincy, where he attended St. Ann's School in Wollaston and Boston College High School.

For some reason, still unknown to his father, Joseph Sr., the youngster chose to matriculate at St. Michael's College in Colchester, Vt.

"But he it was what wanted and we've always supported him," said Joseph Sr.

At St. Mike's, Dunford joined the Platoon Leaders Course (PLC), a sort of ROTC that is unique to the Marine Corps, a move that didn't surprise his family.

His father served in the Marine Corps during the Korean War and his brother, Michael, retired in 2000 as a lieutenant colonel after 21 years as an active and reserve Marine officer.

"He did this on his own," said his father. "He was a political science major at St. Michael's but he decided on the military by himself while he was in college."

Dunford came out of St. Michael's College in June, 1977, with a commission as a second lieutenant, took basic training at Quantico, Va., and shipped out to the West Coast as a platoon commander.

His first assignments included platoon and company commander in the 3rd Battalion, 1st Marine Division and company commander in the 1st Battalion, 9th Marine Division.

He moved up swiftly through the ranks, becoming a senior aide to the commandant in 1992 and executive assistant to the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff from 1999 to 2001.

His one brush with action came in 2003 when, as commander of the Fifth Marine Regiment, he led the first American troops across the Iraq border from Kuwait to protect the oil fields.

His regiment went on to become one of the first to enter Baghdad.

Dunford is a graduate of the U. S. Army Ranger School, the Marine Corps Amphibious Warfare School and the U. S. Army War College.

He has master's degrees in government from Georgetown University and in international relations from the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy.

Dunford is married to the former Ellyn Sartucci of Hingham and they have three children, Joseph, 20, and Patrick, 18, both in college, and Kathleen, 17.

Calls For $300 Fine

Raymondi Would Crackdown On Knife Sales To Youngsters

Teenagers should not be able to own or access knives, according to Ward 2 City Councillor Daniel Raymondi who has pro-posed a city ordinance calling for $300 fines for any-one selling knives to per-sons under the age of 18 years old.

Raymondi told councillors Sept. 2 that he was surprised to learn recently that teenagers can purchase knives, at any time, and without identification.

When a constituent described how easy a teenager could purchase a knife, Raymondi said he was surprised, believing, "There must be something on the books."

Raymondi asked councillors to approve an ordinance prohibiting the gift or sale of knives to any individual 17 years old or younger.

The proposed ordinance was sent to the ordinance Committee for further review. The ordinance would include $300 fines for each offense, which would be issued as a non-criminal complaint enforced by the police department.

"Any person selling knives shall positively establish the purchaser's age as of the date of sale to be 18 years or older by viewing a valid form of photographic identification, such as a driver's license, Massachusetts identification card or passport."

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Sept. 16, 1620, the Mayflower sails from Plymouth, England, bound for Virginia with 102 passengers. However, stormy weather and navigational errors forced the Mayflower off course, and on Nov. 21 the "Pilgrims" reached Massachusetts.

• On Sept. 18, 1793, George Washington lays the cornerstone to the United States Capitol building, the home of the legislative branch of American government. The building would take nearly a century to complete.

• Sept. 19, 1827, after a duel turns into an all-out brawl, Jim Bowie stabs a banker in Alexandria, La., with an early version of his famous Bowie knife. The actual inventor of the Bowie knife, however, was probably not Jim Bowie, but rather his equally belligerent brother, Rezin Bowie.

• On Sept. 21, 1866, H.G. Wells, pioneer of science fiction, is born in Bromley, England. In 1895, Wells published his classic novel "The Time Machine." The book was a success, as were his subsequent books "The Invisible Man" (1897) and "The War of the Worlds" (1898).

• On Sept. 17, 1884, Judge Allen disposes of the 13 criminal cases on his Oakland, Calif., docket in only six minutes. Although he apparently set a new record for speed, defendants in Oakland's criminal court did not stand much chance of gaining an acquittal. In a 40-year period at the turn of the century, only 1 defendant in 100 was acquitted.

• On Sept. 15, 1954, the famous picture of Marilyn Monroe, laughing as her skirt is blown up by the blast from a subway vent, is shot during filming of "The Seven Year Itch." The scene infuriated her husband, baseball star Joe DiMaggio, and the couple divorced shortly after.

• On Sept. 20, 1973, in a highly publicized "Battle of the Sexes" tennis match, top women's player Billie Jean King, 29, beats Bobby Riggs, 55, a former No. 1-ranked men's player. Riggs, a self-proclaimed male chauvinist, had boasted that women were inferior. King beat Riggs 6-4, 6-3, 6-3.

Women And Politics

So, 2008 wasn't the year for a woman president. Hillary really tried though.

We could get a woman vice-president. Sarah is out there giving it her all. We'll know Nov. 4.

There really aren't many women in major roles on the national political stage.

Hillary Clinton stands out as a U.S. senator and first woman to run for president. So does Nancy Pelosi as Speaker of the House.

And, now, Sarah Palin, a virtual unknown as governor of Alaska, in just a few weeks is now an everyone-knows-her-name candidate for vice-president.

But politics has been pretty much a man's world. Not only nationally, but locally, too. Like here in Quincy.

Not one woman mayor and only four women city councillors in the 119 years since Quincy moved from a town to a city in 1889.

Current Mayor Tom Koch is the 30th man elected. Four women have tried unsuccessfully. Score: Men: 30. Women: 0.

Women's best bet for elective office has been for school committee. Twenty have won seats.

The first was Mabel Adams in 1896. And only 19 others in the 112 years since.

The four women who tried to make it to the mayor's office were:

Rita Anderson (1971), Grace Saphir (1973 and 1975) and Joanne Condon and Sabina Kavanaugh Stenberg, both in 1985.

Of the four, Saphir was the top vote getter. She had an impressive 10,416 against incumbent Walter Hannon's 15,492 in 1973.

Quincy's first woman councillor was Edna Austin, an attorney, elected in 1942-54 years after Quincy became a city. She served as councillor at-large and retired in 1959.

It was another 18 years before the second woman-Joanne Condon-was elected to the city council, winning the Ward 6 seat in 1977.

She served until 1985 when she gave up the seat to unsuccessfully challenge Mayor Frank McCauley who defeated her for a third term.

Third woman councillor was Patricia Toland who came over from the school committee in 1981. For four years, she and Condon made political history together: the first and only time two women were seated in the city council at the same time.

Toland also made some history on her own: the only woman ever elected city council president. She served 11 years on the council before becoming assistant city clerk.

Fourth woman councillor was Alicia Gardner who was elected in 2003 but stepped down after serving just one term.

The council has been all-male ever since.

Women have made progress through the 119 years. Inch by inch progress you might say.

While Quincy was still a town in 1880, selectmen issued a "Qualified Female Voters" list. It contained only nine names.

In those days women could vote for school committee only.

In 1919 when the 19th amendment to the Constitution was adopted giving nationwide suffrage to women, Quincy, now a city-had 7,707 male registered voters to 429 female.

In 1920 when the 19th amendment actually became effective, women rushed to register. That year, male voters numbered 9,200. But women were gaining fast with 6,236.

Women not only caught up to the men a few years ago, but passed them. They presently outnumber men by approximately 3,000, according to City Clerk Joseph Shea.

If women voters united behind a woman mayoral candidate that would put a woman in the third floor office as chief executive.

But women vote for the candidate-male or female-which, of course, is the way it should be.

Quincy's mayors have usually come out of the city council but not always. Latest exception was William Phelan who ran for mayor as a second-term school committeeman in 2001 and stunned the political scene with a 17-vote upset win over six-term incumbent James Sheets.

Weymouth switched from a town to city government in 1999 and already has a woman mayor. Susan Kay was elected Weymouth's second mayor last year.

So, ladies, it can be done.

Someday there will be a Madam Mayor at City Hall. But we might have to wait awhile longer.

She could be snugly in her crib right now. Or starting pre-school.

But maybe she's closer than that.

Whoever she is and whenever she arrives, she would certainly be an interesting occupant of that third floor office.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS 1930's postcard view of the Hotel Taylor that was on Fensmere Avenue at the end of Houghs Neck. Thomas Taylor and then his wife, Jane, operated this hotel for almost 20 years until it closed down in the late 1930's. It had 40 rooms all with outside windows, most with ocean views. The Taylors also operated a poolroom, bowling alley and a ballroom on their property. Built as The Fensmere Hotel in 1900, it was later named The Crystal Lake Hotel and then The Pandora before Taylor bought it. The four-acre site included a salt-water pond with a small island. Guests used the pond for canoeing. The property was later taken by the city as the site for the old Great Hill School and is now used for a public park. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

John McDuff: Voice For Animal Rights

I was very impressed by the story of the Hanabury Foundation's work for feral cats. Kathy was an outstanding young woman, and it is a shame that she is no longer with us to continue her efforts on behalf of animals.

I would appreciate the chance to discuss the League, for any new people, who may not be familiar with it.

In November of 1981, John H. McDuff was asked by the New England Anti-Vivisection Society to head up a drive to put an end to pound seizure of dogs for experimentation in Quincy. John accepted the challenge and from that the Quincy Animal League was born. He addressed the City Council and the Council agreed to ask the state government to exempt our city from pound seizure. Even with the support of our state legislators it took two years to pass, and be signed by Governor Dukakis.

Two of my favorite photos are of John leading a hundred person march against pound seizure, and another one of John with Gov. Dukakis getting the bill signed. There is no doubt that John McDuff became the voice of animal rights in our city at that time.

The successes go on from there. John and Mayor

Frank McCauley, along with the City Council, worked to get a new animal shelter, that was built in 1989, and donated an alarm system and cleaning system.

Next came the listing of shelter animals in the news-papers for adoption.

In 1995 John teamed up with Kathy to ban performing animal acts in our city. John thought a great deal of her, and was looking forward to more good works together, when sadly she left us. In fact, many of the original supporters of the work of the Quincy Animal league are no longer with us, but John McDuff, at 75, is still at the head of the organization he created and has led for 26 years.

Over those many years he has received commendations from the city and state, and from the Quincy Citizens Association, who gave him the Man of the Year Award. In 1995 John was named "Human Hero of the Year" by his success with the ban on circus animals and other activities.

With John's leadership, the Quincy Animal League continues to be one of Quincy's true treasures.

Plan To Borrow For Parking Areas Meets Snag

By FRANK MCCAULEY

The plan to borrow money this year for the purchase of off-street parking areas for Wollaston and Norfolk Downs was stymied when Alexander Smith, city auditor, advised that such a borrowing was impossible because the city had provided no qualifying fee for such takings.

Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa said he would discuss with councillors that possibility of using parking meter receipts and the possibility of other reserve funds to proceed with the proposal.

In a recent public hearing, North Quincy merchants and the Chamber of Commerce urged the council to make the takings.

BETHELEM STEEL HAS 49% OF U.S. MERCHANT SHIP WORK

Bethlehem Steel Corporation's shipbuilding division holds contracts for nearly half-49.6% of the new deadweight tonnage of merchant ships being built in American shipyards.

Of this total, 1,073,550 tons or 26.7% will be built at the Fore River Shipyard. Fore River will build 19 tankers ranging in size from 16,000 to 105,000 deadweight tons.

A keel was laid this week for the first of five 46,000-deadweight ton tankers that the Fore River Shipyard will build for the Onassis' interests.

The Quincy shipyard has six other ships in various stages of construction.

United States congressman until his death at 81.

During his final years, Adams helped defeat the 'gag rule' developed by Southern legislators, which was aimed at preventing debate on petitions against slavery.

As a lawyer, Adams, also, successfully defended imprisoned Africans who mutinied on the slave ship Amistad.

Cooke won international recognition for his portrayal of Adams when he toured Russia for the U.S. state department in 2007 when the countries commemorated the 200th anniversary of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

For more than 20 years, Cooke has, also, done solo re-enactments of historical figures like Presidents Calvin Coolidge and John Quincy Adams.

Marie's Kitchen

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Rita's Perfect Peach Gobbler

At our annual pool closing cook-out, most of the foods were cooked ahead of time, and just a few things actually cooked outside. Everyone brought an entrée, dessert or appetizers.

My daughter Rita brought a delicious peach gobbler and since peaches are still in the supermarkets there's still time to bake this delicious dessert. This pie has no bottom crust.

Preheat oven to 425

PEACH GOBBLER

6 peaches (ripe)
1/2 cup of white and brown sugar mixed
1/8 teaspoon cinnamon pinch of nutmeg

pinch of salt
2 tablespoons corn starch a ten inch pie plate pastry for the top

Rita made her own wheat pastry, but you can purchase any type in the markets, or in the natural food section if you want wheat. Cut the peaches in slices. Add all the other ingredients. Place the mixture on the bottom of a pie plate. Dot top with butter. Top with the pastry and brush with milk. Then vent the top and bake for 15 minutes on 425 degrees and then to 350 degrees for 45 minutes or until top is browned. For a crunch topping, sprinkle sugar on top before baking. Rita made hers with lattice effect which looked pretty as a picture.

School Committee Votes Union Pay $100,000

Court Approval Awaited On Strike Penalties

The School Committee voted unanimously to a settlement agreement that will require the Quincy teachers' union to pay $100,000 in damages as a result of last year's strike.

The agreement, which will now go before a court for approval, essentially settles lingering issues surrounding the bitter teachers' strike in June of 2007, which shut down Quincy schools.

"It is time for all of us to move from what happened last year, and begin working to ensure that it doesn't happen again," said Mayor Thomas Koch, who is chairman of the School Committee. "This agreement is a signal that the School Department, the City, and our teachers are ready to work together moving forward."

The School Committee's legal team, which has worked on the case since the strike in June of 2007, proposed the $100,000 fine in July after courts handling the strike fallout requested an accounting of actual damages suffered by the city. The School Committee debated the figure at three meetings in executive session, with some members arguing for a higher figure.

The Committee's legal advisers suggested that a higher figure would likely prompt a protracted and costly legal fight with teachers and would not withstand the scrutiny of an arbitrator, Koch said. The committee ultimately voted 7-0 to accept the agreement at its meeting last Wednesday.

As part of the damages assessment, the School Committee agreed not to fight the union's request to have separate court fines folded into the damages to create one overall payment directly to the City. If the court rejects the agreement, new negotiations will be necessary, officials said.

"The School Committee displayed true leadership for finding common ground on this issue, and I am proud that our elected officials are now ready to focus on protecting Quincy Public Schools rather than political payback," Koch said.

Group Seeks To Found Quincy Granite Museum

One of the most important yet least promoted attractions in the city of Quincy is the granite industry, which provided the best building materials during the "stone age" of American architecture.

A group of history and tourist-conscious residents is about to do something about it, something like the establishment of a Quincy Quarry & Granite Workers Museum.

They've even selected a location, the site of the historic Lyons Turning Mill at Ricciuti and Quarry Hills Drives in West Quincy, the heart of the industry more than 100 years ago.

"This part of Quincy's history is being lost to future generations," said the group in its mission statement. "The focus of this museum will be on all areas of the granite industry."

"Our goals for the museum are to preserve the historical information and materials related to Quincy granite quarrying (and) the granite workers and promote interest in Quincy granite through exhibits, programs and educational activities."

The group is interested in acquiring memorabilia and pictures of the granite industry in Quincy. Photographs can be scanned and returned to the sender.

The group is also seeking to attract new members, form a non-profit, fund-raising, grant writing, re-search, legal advice and establishing a website, in other words, getting organized.

The group can be contacted at the Quincy Quarry & Granite Worker Museum, P.O. Box 690724, Quincy 02169.

The graduates, ages 17 to 21 include: Matthew Miller, Joseph Pepin, J.E. Addison, Michael Morganelli, Frank Pyne, Joseph Pfister, all of Quincy; Christopher Mitchell, Jaryd Quirk, Raymond Lomax, Joseph Carnes, Ryan Jewett, all of Weymouth; Ryan Serafini, Matthew Fields-Cord, both of Randolph; James Joyce of South Boston, Derek Vautrinot of Rockland, Joaquin Storms of Dorchester, and David Barron of Hull.

"YouthBuild 2008 graduates are a great group of talented, smart and dedicated young adults. We are so proud of their accomplishments. They have excelled at the worksite, received their GEDS, and participated in numerous community service projects," said Isabel J. Cobb, TRA Quincy Manager.

Quincy YouthBuild is part of a nationwide movement of over 225 YouthBuild programs designed to unleash the positive energy of unemployed young people to rebuild their communities and their own lives with a commitment to work, education, responsibility and family.

In partnership with Quincy Housing Authority, TRA has operated YouthBuild programming in Quincy since 2001, serving close to 200 youth.

"We are very pleased to be partners with Training Resources of America in this very worthwhile program. We're proud of the accomplishments of the participants. Their work has certainly improved the properties of the Quincy Housing Authority. We look forward to continuing to work with them in the future," said Quincy Housing Authority Executive Director Jay MacRitchie.

The program provides comprehensive training to young people ages 16 to 24 that meet low-income guidelines, are not in school, have not received a high school diploma or GED, and demonstrate a willingness to work hard for personal and community change.

Students receive instruction in remediation/ GED preparation, self esteem/ life and leadership skills, and job readiness training. Extensive support services include counseling/ case management, job development and placement assistance, as well as job retention and follow-up services. Construction skills training utilizes a community housing rehabilitation or new construction project which helps create quality low-income housing.

With direction and support from the Quincy Housing Authority, Quincy YouthBuild students are helping to replace roofs, siding, and windows at 180 four-family buildings in the Riverview Family Development in the "Germantown" neighborhood.

Community service is another component of the program. This year the students volunteered weekly at Cradles to Crayons. One of the projects there involved making backpacks for students returning to school.

They participated in the annual YouthBuild State House Day as well as the YouthBuild Carpentry Challenge competition and basketball tournament.

Collaborating agency representatives will speak at the ceremony. Family and friends will be on hand to congratulate the graduates as they prepare to use their new skills in the workplace.

It Is Time To Do What Is Best For The City's Children

Reading the recent articles and advertisements The Quincy Sun concerning the status of Quincy's 13 to 15-year old Babe Ruth division and discussing the issues with both groups involved has left a number of parents and young men confused and disappointed.

Both sides have stated that the administration of the division needs to be reorganized and updated and each group has moved down that road in different ways. However, actions such as dismissing the opinions and work of longtime leaders and volunteers with the Babe Ruth division, seceding from Quincy Youth Baseball or disagreeing over the charter from Babe Ruth Baseball don't solve much.

The young men playing youth baseball in the city do not worry that which group will have the Babe Ruth charter or that one group had had the charter for years or that one league would host a regional tournament. What the young men and many parents want is one league with friends and families playing together in a spirited and well run environment.

We hope that this separation can be amicably resolved and the groups can come together to talk and we ask them to do that soon. One thought is to engage an independent party not affiliated with Quincy sports or Babe Ruth Baseball to meet with both groups (and possibly Babe Ruth Baseball) to understand the issues and work towards a solution.

Having been parents of players, as well as coaches and volunteers, we have seen the countless hours people from both groups have spent volunteering with the children of Quincy. We believe that each group is trying to do what is best for the young men. However, until this matter is resolved, what is best for the baseball players in Quincy is not being accomplished.

11th Annual Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk Set for Sept. 28

The 11th Annual Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk will be held Sunday, Sept. 28 at Pageant Field in Merrymount Park in Quincy.

Registration begins at 8 a.m., and the four-mile, non-competitive walk starts at 9:30 a.m.

The QMC Cancer Walk Committee is led by Chairman of the QMC Board of Trustees Bob Curry, of Curry ACE Hardware, and Honorary Chairman Hank Bradley, director of Quincy Veterans Services. Boston Medical Center and Curry Ace Hardware are presenting sponsors of the 2008 QMC Cancer Walk.

"This is a great event for the hospital and for the community," said Curry. "Last year, approximately 1,500 people participated and raised more than $201,000. This year, our goal is to raise $300,000 for the Curry Fund through corporate sponsors, individual walkers, walk teams and matching gifts."

The Marie A. Curry Fund at Quincy Medical Center (QMC) was established in 1995 by the Curry family of Quincy as a lasting, living memorial to their wife and mother who died of breast cancer. Marie's family and the City of Quincy's Mayor's Commission on Women joined together in 1998 to create a walk to support the Curry Fund. Nearly $1.5-million has been raised for the Curry Fund since its inception. Now in its 11th year, the QMC Cancer Walk supports the Fund's mission to:

- promote the early detection and prevention of a wide range of cancers;

- ensure that women and men in our community who have the need can access free and potentially life-saving cancer screenings;

- purchase state-of-the-art medical equipment to detect cancer; and

- fund cancer education programs for caregivers.

The post-walk celebration at Pageant Field will include lunch provided by a variety of local restaurants, including Outback Steakhouse and Chipotle Mexican Grill of Quincy, as well as a family-friendly Safety and Health Fair organized in conjunction with the Quincy Police Department. The fair will offer a variety of health screenings, information and giveaways, as well as demonstrations by local, state and federal law enforcement agencies. There will be child car seat installations and inspections, auto glass etching (which can save up to 15% on auto insurance), and free fingerprinting and videotaping through the Child Identification Program (MYCHIP) provided by the Rural Lodge of Freemasons in Quincy and the QPD. In addition, the Children's Hospital bloodmobile will be on-site for the Glennon Family blood drive.

Individuals or teams can pre-register and/or fundraiser for the QMC Cancer Walk on-line at www.firstgiving.com/qmccancerwalk, pick up a pledge sheet at Quincy Medical Center and in businesses throughout the community, or download a pledge form at www.quincymc.org.

In addition, there are many volunteer opportunities in the weeks leading up to the Walk and on the day of the event. For additional information about the QMC Cancer Walk, contact Lola Tom in the Quincy Medical Center Development Office at 617-376-5493 or email ltom@quincymc.org.

Norfolk County Recruiting Volunteers For Emergencies

Norfolk County RSVP Volunteer Program is recruiting individuals for Emergency Preparedness training programs throughout the county. Training covers a variety of areas from community education to shelter management.

"Volunteers who know their town's emergency management coordinators (EMC's) need are better able to assist their neighbors in an emergency," said Francis O'Brien, Norfolk County commission Chairman.

"This is why Norfolk County RSVP is working with local and regional EMC's and the American Red Cross to train volunteers in how to plan for, and respond to, an emergency within their own communities."

Norfolk County RSVP is sponsored by the Norfolk County Commissioners and is affiliated with the Federal Corporation for National and Community Service, one of the nation's largest volunteer agencies.

RSVP programs recruit and place volunteers who are 55 years of age and older in service positions through the county. Programs include reading tutors, emergency preparedness and other volunteer efforts intended to meet identified community needs.

For more information, call Elizabeth Larkin at Norfolk County RSVP office, 781-329-5728.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Four Recent Fire Incidents

I came into work one Monday morning and took a quick look at the weekend incidents. There were four fires contained within structures while taking a look at them now; we might take some preventative thoughts away with us and possibly identifying the incidents with our own behavior.

The electrical inspector determined that one fire started within the walls and was electrical in nature. It was relayed to me that there was a great deal of nesting material found within the wall channel. Wiring was present and there was no fixture or junction box located within the area of origin.

Considering these facts, the only conclusion that can be made from the evidence is that a rodent chewed on the wiring insulation located adjacent to the nest, causing a short in the wires, which extended to the nesting material and onto structural members of the buildings. I can't say that I've seen this happen before while it's somewhat unusual in nature; it is however, the only possible conclusion.

In another incident, a lamp fell onto a mattress igniting it. Under normal conditions, with a bulb in an approved lamp holder and the fixture properly guarded, the heating hazard is negligible, but ignition of combustible materials such as a mattress may result if a lamp accidentally falls onto the mattress itself. This is what occurred while the fire was confined to the mattress alone.

Space heaters, lamps, and any heat producing appliances and fixtures should be left secured on stable bases to avoid tipping and incidents such as this one.

In another, an occupant went to bed while smoking a cigarette. In this instance, the occupant soon slept while the cigarette ignited the bedding and mattress. The sprinkler system extinguished the fire while the occupant escaped serious injury.

Incidents such as this one typically cause 33% of residential fire deaths. Carelessly disposed of lighted tobacco products ignite upholstered furniture, mattresses, or bedding. These incidents typically occur during late evening or early morning, as did this one. This gentleman was fortunate to escape serious injury or worse, death.

The fourth fire occurred within a cloths' dryer. Upon arriving, the fire fighters found the cloths fully involved while the fire itself was pretty much confined to the dryer itself. An occluded dryer vent caused overheating within the unit and ignited its contents.

Here is a lesson for all of us. One I have written about before, make certain dryer screens and vents are free of obstruction before use and never leave the house with the dryer on.

I figure I will occasionally write a few of these articles hiltng recent fire incidents, hoping that readers will connect with them and alert them to potential ignition sources and shortcomings in behavior so that such incidents can be avoided in their own lives.

I hope you find them helpful.

Organic Land Care

Organic land care is not something new, or trendy, but instead a practice that has evolved over the course of many years. Prior to World War II, almost all lawns were organic by default, as chemical applications of pesticides and fertilizers were very uncommon. Any plant that survived under the cutting height of a lawn mower blade was considered to be part of the "lawn."

During the war effort, many synthetic chemicals were created, a number of which eventually found a place in our lawns. Some of these chemicals acted as defoliants and were used for their herbicidal qualities. After the war ended, certain synthetic chemicals became part of a new campaign to have the perfect weed-free lawn, and a massive marketing effort was undertaken in the 1950's. With the expansion of suburbia in the post-war period, lawns became more common place, and most home owners craved the perfect lawn, which quickly became an American icon.

In our collective quest for the perfect lawn, it was largely unknown to the general public that these synthetic products were extremely hazardous to both humans and wildlife alike. It was not until Rachel Carson published the landmark book "Silent Spring" in 1962 that the dark side of these chemicals came to light. Today, it is almost common knowledge that certain chemicals used in lawn care have been linked to various forms of cancer, have damaged our hormonal systems, and tainted our water supplies. Many of these toxic products are still available today in stores for the sole purpose of making our lawns look greener, and less weedy than ever before.

Fortunately for us, saner alternatives do exist, and we can take steps to have a nice organic lawn, without poisoning ourselves and the environment that sustains us. We are currently on the crest of a giant "green" wave, propelled by the recent influx of information about how to slow global warming, improve our health, and protect our natural resources.

Manuals on organic lawn care have proliferated, as well as information on the Internet, so there is no shortage of "how to" for do-it-yourselfers. The Northeast Organic Farming Association (NOFA) is the leading authority on organic lawn care, and developed a set of standards for practitioners to follow. The protocol is adopted from the organic agricultural standards for food, and forbids the use of any synthetic (chemical) products, and provides the user with instruction as to what type of practices are acceptable.

The NOFA website is www.nofama.org. Another helpful website pertaining to pesticides is www.beyondpesticides.org.

Free Senior Medical Trips

Medical transportation with curb to curb service Mondays through Fridays is provided at no cost to Quincy seniors.

The service requires two weeks notice for trips, including those to Braintree Hospital, Carney Hospital, Milton Hospital and eight major hospitals in Boston.

To request a trip, call the Transportation Office at 617-376-1242.

The Zoning Board of Appeals last week withdrew its approval of the controversial 82-foot billboard erected last spring in West Quincy.

In its decision, board members cited the differences between the board's actual size and location and the design plans presented last spring when the board approved the billboard.

The city will now ask a judge in Norfolk Superior Court to order the sign's removal as directed by Building Inspector Jay Duca.

Duca said this week that he would weigh the city's options regarding further action on the billboard which still has lighted vodka advertisement which reads, "Make Cocktails. Not War".

After the board's decision, City Solicitor James Timmins said any action in any venue is "probably a month away," at least into mid-October.

Timmins said the decision must be finalized and approved by the ZBA at their next meeting. Challengers would then have 20 days to file an appeal.

Chris Harrington of Quincy and Martin Healey, an attorney with the Boston firm of Goodwin Procter, represented Boston Outdoor Ventures, the advertising firm responsible for the billboard.

Matthew Lawler handled the case for Maloney Capitol, LLC.

Lawler appealed the zoning board's original decision allowing the billboard, citing such issues as its two-sided nature.

Residents filled the City Hall meeting and presented ZBA chairman Martin Aikens with a petition signed by some 700 residents who oppose the billboard.

ZBA members voting at last week's meeting with Aikens were Martin Hanley, John Fagerlund, John Brown and Francis Sandomato.

Solicitor To Discuss Willard Street Billboard

City Solicitor James Timmins will discuss the controversial Willard Street billboard at a community meeting Tuesday, Sept. 30, at 7 p.m. at the Ward 4 Neighborhood Center, 100 Brooks Ave.

The electronic billboard, advertising a brand of vodka, stands 82 feet above Biondi's Service Center, raising concerns from residents and businesses who see it as a blight on the neighborhood.

At the invitation of the Ward 4 Neighborhood Association, Timmins will speak to the permitting process, the roles of the city and the state and efforts of the city to provide relief.

For more information, call Brian Palmucci at 617-233-3802.

'Good News' To Tape 700th Program At Point Congregational

A video milestone will occur this Sunday (Sept. 21) as the Quincy Point Congregational Church tapes its 700th Sunday morning program of "Good News."

The first program was taped in November of 1990. Created by then pastor the Rev. Fred Atwood-Lyon, a communications team headed up by church member and television specialist, Bob Gohl, generally tapes 40 weeks a year taking the summer months off.

Members of the team include church members: Jack Bissett, Adam McGhee, Craig Jackson, Ian Champion, Bob Romeiri and Don Smith.

Postproduction editing and the adding of graphics take place at the studio of Quincy Access Television. The church would especially like to thank the staff, particularly Executive Director Bette Campbell for the use of their production area and their guidance.

Catherine Dewey To Be Honored Law School, Oldest Graduate Will Share 100th Milestone

Mrs. Catherine Dewey, who lives in Marina Bay, will be a guest of honor at the 100th convocation of the New England School of Law at TD Banknorth Garden in Boston next Tuesday.

And why not?

She'll be 100 years old herself on Nov. 1.

For all the school knows, Mrs. Dewey is the oldest living graduate of New England Law School but she'll certainly be the oldest of the alumna from the 1930s at the convocation.

She graduated from New England Law when it was known as Portia Law School, one of only two schools that permitted women to learn the secrets of nolo contendere and ha-beas corpus at the time.

She was the founder of

an all female law firm that practiced the legal arts out of 2 Beacon St. in the very heart of the then-male dominated profession.

A native of Everett, where she was once a member of the School Committee, and the widow of Judge George Dewey, Mrs. Dewey moved to Quincy at the tender age of 78.

She and her husband had seven children but only one of them took up the law.

That would be her daughter, Susan.

Landscape Lighting: A Great Way To Dress Up Your Home

(ARA) - The real estate market may be in a slump, but not all industries having to do with the home are in trouble. Companies that specialize in remodeling and renovation, particularly in the area of outdoor living, are doing extremely well right now.

"People don't want to lose money on their biggest investment so instead of moving, they're improving their homes," says Joe Rey-Barreau, an associate professor at the University of Kentucky's School of Interior Design and education consultant for the American Lighting Association (ALA). He says now that warmer weather has arrived, people are adding decks, patios, gazebos and outdoor kitchens to their homes, and they aren't just planning to use them in the daytime.

"The trend towards expanding outdoor living space has been growing for some time now," says Richard Lentz, president of Lentz Landscape Lighting in Dallas, Texas. "In past years, our goal was focused on lighting the space and showing off the garden. Now we're concentrating a lot more effort on finding innovative ways to light outdoor spaces so they can be used at night, much like they're used during the day."

Backyard decks no longer just have a small light near the door. Lentz says lighting designers are now installing down lights in trees and attaching them to chimneys to shine light down on the space. "We're also putting in a lot of step lights to make the transition from the upper to lower level easier," says Lentz, who adds that people no longer have to feel like they're under a spotlight when they sit outside under the stars. "If there's a tree nearby, we can shine light down from it. Attaching fixtures to a chimney is also a nice way to get light from

And when it comes to lighting outdoor kitchens, innovation is key. "We do a lot of task lighting in the outdoor kitchen," says Lentz. "We'll utilize the arbors to hang task lighting over the sink, the grill and the table, for example, and put them on dimmers so when the light isn't needed, it can be turned down."

Lentz credits the recent innovations offered by various lighting manufacturers for making those projects possible. "Technology sure has come a long way in a short amount of time," he says.

Rey-Barreau agrees. "Manufacturers realize there's a growing market for outdoor fixtures and they have responded by stepping up to the challenge to develop chandeliers, table lamps and sconces that are rated for wet conditions so they can be safely installed outdoors," he says.

Safety isn't the only factor being considered by manufacturers. So is operating cost. Not so long ago, the U.S. government mandated that the lighting industry find ways to cut energy consumption of their products. Kichler Lighting of Cleveland, Ohio, responded by coming out with a line of outdoor fixtures that use highly efficient L.E.D. bulbs that require one-third the energy of incandescents.

"When people realize they can get the same light output, a nice comfortable color and reduce energy use by 75 percent, they are more than willing to make the change," says Jeff Dross at Kichler Lighting.

There have been innovations in the area of lighting for curb appeal purposes as well. "Landscape lighting is about safety, security and aesthetics. As far as the latter goes, the key to success is being subtle. Less is always more," says Monty Gilbertson, manager of Lighting Design by Wettsteins in La Crosse, Wisc.

Doug Prexta, who works for the landscape division of Cleveland, Ohio-based Hincley Lighting confirms lighting the outdoors is a trend that's here to stay. "Our business is way up in the landscape division because people are investing in their homes more and more," he says.

For more information about landscape lighting, or to find a lighting showroom near you, log on to the American Lighting Association's Web site at www.AmericanLightingAssoc.com or call (800) BRIGHT-IDEAS (800-274-4484).

Help for First-Time Homebuyers

As part of the Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008, those who want to buy a home will get some help. The biggest item in the legislation is the credit of up to $7,500 that can be given to first-time homebuyers.

But that "credit" needs to be looked at closely. Although it looks like a tax credit, the program is actually a loan that you'll claim on your tax return. As such, it becomes an obligation that you'll owe to the Internal Revenue Service over a span of 15 years.

Specifics of the program:

- Single taxpayers must make less than $75,000 (and married couples less than $150,000).

- The allowed credit is up to 10 percent of the cost of the house.

- The credit amounts to a zero-interest loan.

- You must buy your home between April 9, 2008, and July 1, 2009. (The date is determined by the closing date.)

"First-time buyers" means you haven't owned a principal-residence home for three years. If you owned a vacation home, you're not disqualified.

You'll begin making payments to the IRS two years after you claim the credit. Payments will be made via your tax payments, although the specifics haven't been ironed out yet.

Some considerations to think about:

Even though this is given as a tax credit, it really is a loan, and you'll owe money to the IRS. If you don't pay, the standard IRS penalties and interest will kick in.

If you sell your home, the money becomes due. The IRS doesn't need to be paid directly out of proceeds from the sale, but you will immediately be obligated to pay back the balance that you owe. (If you sell and your profit is less than the amount you owe the IRS, the balance that you owe is forgiven.)

The same situation would apply if you move but don't sell. Let's say you move to a smaller place and rent out your home. When the home is no longer your main residence, the money becomes due to the IRS for that tax year.

Under the partnership program, each time a Quincy Medical Center employee uses the services of Jack Conway & Co. to buy or sell a home, he or she receives discounted real estate services, and Conway makes a donation to the hospital. Several medical center workers have already benefited from the new partnership.

"The program has really been a success for the hospital and Conway," said Cahill. "It's a great opportunity for the folks here to get the real estate help they need, and get something for the hospital and themselves."

Terminal Connections

Q. In a couple of earlier articles you mentioned attaching or tightening wires around their "terminals." What are terminals, and how do I attach a wire to one? — Gerry P., Huntsville, Ala.

A. A "terminal," in the parlance of minor electrical repair, is a common term for the position in an electrical device where a connection is made or broken. In short, it's where you hook the wires up. A terminal in a small electrical item, such as a lamp or a receptacle, is generally a common screw — you'll typically see two terminals (screws) side by side.

To connect a wire to a terminal, the insulation around the tip of the wire is stripped away (so that the bare wire will contact the terminal, completing the connection). The wire is then bent around the terminal, underneath the screw head, and the screw is tightened just enough to hold the wire snugly.

Connecting the wire to the terminal properly is essential to make sure a receptacle works. Wire that is nicked and scratched or that is loosely connected to the terminal can interfere with the flow of electric current (meaning the receptacle won't work right). Bare wire extending past a screw terminal can cause a short circuit if it touches another metal part.

Fixing these problems can be as simple as ensuring a clean, snug connection to the terminal. To do this, always turn off power to the circuit and test, using a circuit tester, to make sure no current is reaching the unit. Then, access the connector area of the unit (in a low-voltage thermostat, that's behind the control dial; in a wall receptacle, unscrew the receptacle and tug out from its metal box). Locate the terminal screws and inspect the wire ends for damage.

Scratched wire can be clipped away; strip a segment of wire behind it and reattach to the terminal. Make sure the bare wire wraps completely around the terminal. The start of the plastic insulation should barely touch the screw head, and no bare wire should jut out from the terminal.

Lackluster Lawn? Four Fast, Simple Steps For Fall Lawn Care

(ARA) — Fall is the time to repair summer-damaged, lackluster lawns and prepare for the winter season. The time you invest in your lawn this fall will earn you lush, healthier grass next spring.

Follow these four fast, simple fall lawn-care steps to promote a greener, better-looking, lush lawn next season:

1. Loosen up and Let it Breathe

Your lawn needs air to grow. As a rule of thumb, if you can't see the grass due to leaf coverage, then it's time to remove the lawn debris from the yard. Clearing leaves and clippings in the fall will help by removing the clutter that keeps air and sun from reaching the growing grass.

Aeration and dethatching loosen up the lawn, promote deep root growth, and reduce soil compaction that can keep grass from developing roots deep enough to absorb rainwater. Tackling these tasks in the fall can help ensure the health and beauty of your lawn come spring.

Fortunately, it's easier than ever to avoid the hard work of traditional aeration and dethatching methods. LazyMan Liquid Gold, an all-natural, spray-on product, aerates and dethatches soil without mechanical means. It also conditions the soil at the same time.

LazyMan Liquid Gold uses polyelectrolytes, with their positive and negative electrical charges, to loosen up the soil. This allows air, water and nutrients to enter the root zone more easily. The product also contains microbes to feed on dead plant material that contains thatch as well as a soil conditioner made of kelp, humic acids and mycorrhizae (fungi that help plants absorb water and nutrients).

2. Drive Out Drought Damage

Summer's drought leaves many lawns across the country straw-colored and dormant. To help your lawn recover during and after drought, fertilize it every eight weeks with a slow-release fertilizer. A lawn that has the proper nutrients grows dense and deep and will green up faster. A regularly fed lawn will also be healthier and thicker than an unfed lawn. Couple feedings with infrequent, deep watering to promote deeper roots and offer a larger reservoir of water to draw from.

3. Continue to Feed the Need

Even lawns not stricken by drought need nourishment in the fall. Fall feeding can bring dramatic improvements as the lawn recovers from summer damage. Fertilizers help "winterize" the lawn, storing vital nutrients so that underground root development can continue until the ground freezes to ready the lawn for fuller growth next spring. Two feedings — timed around Labor Day and the end of October — are recommended for northern lawns, while southern lawns are best-fed four to six weeks before the first frost occurs.

4. Always Overseed

Once the lawn is aerated and dethatched, look for weak spots in it. Overseeding, the spreading of grass seed directly onto soil within an existing lawn, can improve a lawn's appearance dramatically and eliminate the need for a total lawn renovation.

Early fall is the prime time to overseed because the warm soil promotes rapid seed growth and typically, fewer weed problems emerge during this time of the year.

HEALTH and FITNESS

by Andrea Wyatt
M.S.S., C.S.C.S.

Put Your Best Foot Forward

There are many factors that contribute to a successful fitness plan. One very important one is choosing the right footwear. It might not seem like a big deal, but continuous movement in improper footwear can lead to serious ankle, knee, hip and back problems.

For example, you begin a running program and soon after experience discomfort in your knees. It's possible that this discomfort is a result of unhappy feet in improper footwear. Before you start an exercise program, make sure your feet are happy and ready to go.

Jasen A. Langley, DPM, AACFAS, a member of the American Podiatric Medical Association, recommends the following steps in selecting the proper footwear for your activity level.

1. Fit: This is the most important factor in choosing footwear. You should be fitted by a knowledgeable shoe salesperson. Running shoes should always have some room, since runners are susceptible to blisters.

2. Purpose: Buy the shoe that best fits your activity and activity level.

3. Brands: No single brand is better than another. Try various styles to determine which brand is stylish yet comfortable.

4. Support: Those "cool" colors in the soles of sneakers are built into the shoe for a reason. The colors represent different densities of material. Rule of thumb: The denser the material, the more support there tends to be in the shoe.

5. Orthotics: Your new sneakers or footwear should accommodate orthotic devices. If you use orthotic devices, I suggest you bring them to the store with you to have them properly fitted into your shoe. For those who do not know what orthotic devices are, ask a podiatrist.

6. Durability: Look at the overall aspect of the shoe. Inspect the material. Check the style of the shoe. If you exercise hard, you change shoes every two to three months. The wear of your shoes causes stress and strain in the foot.

7. Reputation: Go to reputable stores. Running stores usually have salespeople who are very knowledgeable about running and cross-training shoes.

8. Ask: Contact your local podiatrist for questions or concerns you may have about your feet or footwear. You will receive very knowledgeable information about conditions of the foot, treatment options and proper shoe selection.

Always consult a physician before beginning an exercise program. If you have a fitness or training question, write to Andrea in care of King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Images Of Honor And Memory:

A Visual Tribute At the 11th Annual QMC Cancer Walk

The Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk Committee announces for the seventh year, Images of Honor and Memory will be on display during the 11th Annual QMC Cancer Walk Sunday, Sept. 28 at Pageant Field in Merrymount Park.

Images of Honor and Memory is a visual tribute representing the profound impact cancer has had on the community.

Last year, more than 500 Images of Honor and Memory containers filled the Ruth Gordon Amphitheatre, adjacent to Pageant Field, during the Walk. The display features pink, blue and white sand-filled containers, each adorned with a name of the person who is being honored or remembered. White containers honor cancer survivors; pink and blue containers memorialize individuals who have lost their lives to cancer.

Do's And Don'ts Of Dealing With Diaper Rash

(ARA) - More than one new mom has felt frustrated or helpless over diaper rash. One of the most common ailments of infancy is also among the least understood; 64 percent of moms said that diaper rash was only a minor problem, and the majority are unaware that a yeast infection can cause a more serious diaper rash, according to a recent nationwide survey of new and expectant moms.

"It can be easy to chuckle over diaper talk, but if you're a parent faced with fighting your baby's relentless diaper rash, you know it's not a laughing matter," says Dr. Jennifer Shu, a pediatrician from Atlanta, Ga., and co-author of "Heading Home with Your Newborn: From Birth to Reality." "Many mothers struggle heroically to keep their babies rash-free, but misconceptions about the causes and treatments of diaper rash may hinder their efforts."

And even in our health-aware society, misconceptions about diaper rash persist. The "Baby Bottom Line Report," conducted by Penn, Schoen & Berland Associates on behalf of Barrier Therapeutics, Inc., makers of dermatology products, found that fewer than one in five respondents could identify any of the defined differences between a normal diaper rash and a more serious or severe diaper rash such as one with yeast infection.

Dr. Shu offers new and expectant mothers a few tips on dealing with diaper rash: DO realize that it's not your fault.

Many causes lead to diaper rash, both mild and severe, from simple chafing, to prolonged exposure of the skin to urine or stool, to infection by a common type of yeast called Candida. Rare indeed is the baby who will make it out of diapers without ever experiencing some diaper rash, no matter how vigilant the parents are.

DON'T wait to deal with a bad diaper rash - it may be more.

Typically, diaper rash will clear up in three days or less with simple, over-the-counter treatments. But if the rash lasts more than 72 hours, you should take your baby to your health care provider because it's possible the rash is accompanied by a yeast infection.

"Many of the cases of persistent diaper rash that I treat involve a yeast infection," Dr. Shu says. "However, parents don't always know that yeast is a common cause of these rashes, which can get worse without proper treatment."

DO learn the difference.

Typical diaper rash develops as mild redness with well-defined edges between affected and healthy skin. A diaper rash complicated by Candida will usually have a "beefy" red appearance, smaller rashes outside the edges of the affected area, bumps with or without pus, and will last longer than three days.

DO consult your health care provider at the first sign of a bad diaper rash.

Standard over-the-counter diaper rash treatments may not cure a rash with a yeast infection; an antifungal treatment may be necessary. Your health care provider is best qualified to diagnose your baby's severe diaper rash and tell you whether a yeast infection is present.

Until recently, parents had to use a combination of creams and ointments to treat a diaper rash with yeast infection, including antifungal products, steroids to relieve symptoms, and a barrier ointment. However, the Federal Food and Drug Administration has approved Vusion Ointment (0.25 percent miconazole nitrate, 15 percent zinc oxide, 81.35 percent white petrolatum) for the treatment of diaper rash with yeast infections. Specifically formulated for the treatment of diaper rash with Candida, Vusion is the only treatment FDA-approved for this purpose.

In addition to the proper treatment, it's important to keep the baby's diaper area as clean and dry as possible, Dr. Shu says. Change diapers frequently, clean the baby's diaper area with warm water and mild soap or a gentle baby wipe when needed, and keep the diaper area open to the air whenever possible. "Medication can't cure diaper rash if the baby's diaper area is not kept clean and dry," she says.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

THE GUM DISEASE/DIABETES LINK

Several recent studies suggest that by taking better care of their teeth and gums, people with type 2 diabetes can exert better control over the disease. According to the studies, type 2 diabetics who have gum disease are more likely to develop worsened glycemic control as well as have a higher risk for end-stage kidney disease. Numerous studies point to the fact that good glycemic control lessens the development and progression of diabetes' complications. With this in mind, when glycemia is difficult for diabetes patients to control, they might want to consider rescheduling a visit with the dentist, who can check for signs of gum disease. Diagnosis and treatment may help keep glucose levels under control. People with diabetes have special needs and your dentist and hygienist are equipped to meet those needs - with your help. Keep us informed of any changes in your condition and any medication you might be taking. Fall To Scituate In Opener, 24-0

Raiders Eye Rebound Against Sharon Saturday

By SEAN BRENNAN

The North Quincy Red Raiders (0-1 overall, 0-1 in the Patriot League) opened the 2008 football season with a disappointing 24-0 shutout loss to Scituate High School last Friday night at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

The contest, which was also the team's first game played in the Patriot League, gave fans no indication of the progress that these Red Raiders had made during last season's 6-5 campaign. Scituate dominated ball control and limited what should be a high-powered North Quincy offense to no points and very little in offensive production.

"(Scituate) did a great job controlling the clock and they played methodical, mistake-free football," said NQ head coach Jim Connor. "We needed to work better as a team but I saw some things that were positive. Even though we were having a tough time stopping their offense, we never stopped hustling and that makes me feel like we will be alright the rest of the season."

The Sailors, a Keenan Division representative (the Raiders represent the Fisher Division), closed the first quarter of play with a clock chewing 13-play drive. Using mostly a power running attack, Scituate halfbacks Chris Mogan and Martin Noenickx traded handoffs and continually gained first down yards while milking the clock.

Scituate would eventually score the first points of the game at the beginning of the second quarter on a four-yard option run by Mogan. The point after attempt (PAT) was wide left.

"They won mainly because of the amount of time they controlled the ball," added Connor. "I think possession was 3:1 and they played mistake-free ball and didn't turn the football over. We had a hard time stopping their drives. Most of them were 10 to 12 play possessions and they just took it down the field."

"You have to give the

credit where credit is due."

This scoring drive had started after a promising North Quincy possession came to a screeching halt near the end of the first quarter. North Quincy running back Joe Vialpando had started the drive with a nifty 40-yard dash, a run that brought the Raiders into Sailors' territory. But on second down from the Scituate 30-yard line, North Quincy quarterback Mike Stanton dropped back to pass and Noenickx picked off his throw. The Sailors then drove 70 yards to take the 6-0 lead.

After Mogan scored, North Quincy took the ball back and went four downs and out. On the ensuing punt, Scituate's James Voelger returned the ball 51 yards, all the way back to the Red Raider 36-yard line, and the Sailors needed only nine plays to turn their 6-0 advantage into a 12-0 lead (they missed on a two-point conversion).

The Sailors, looking to catch the Raiders off-guard after the touchdown, attempted an onside kick, but the ball was recovered by North setting up a short field for them to work with as time was running out on the first half.

Stanton connected with fullback Brian Donaghey to get North Quincy into Scituate territory and another catch by Donaghey brought the all the way down to the Sailor 26-yard line. But with time running out, Stanton was sacked, ending the half with the Sailors holding a 12-0 advantage.

"With the score 12-0 at the half we had to get more aggressive offensively in the second half," said Connor. "It became time to try some high-risk-high-reward play calling and it just didn't result in any points. Not to make any excuses but we had seven starters out or limited with injury and the kids who stepped in did a nice job, but we weren't at full strength."

"What I would like to see, no matter who is on the field, is my team getting back to playing North Quincy football. We need to remain focused and play hard; that will be what wins us games this year."

Scituate opened their second half the same way they had ended their first. Using the power running game, the Sailors ate up most of the third quarter clock with another extended scoring drive and eventually scored when Kyle Crowley scored on a 30-yard wide receiver reverse handoff. Another missed PAT made the score 18-0.

With a quarter to play, North Quincy finally made some headway offensively as Stanton drove his team all the way down the field. A 20-yard pass to Paul Reamer and a 12-yard pass to Pat Watkins highlighted the impressive drive, but the Scituate defense would not let North punch the football in the end zone.

On third down and goal from the Scituate 5-yard line Stanton dropped back to pass and was intercepted in the end zone. The Sailors returned the INT all the way back to the Red Raiders 27-yard line and five plays later, Mogan scored from 22 yards out for the last score of the game.

"Pat Watkins showed some hustle even after the interception," said Connor. "He chased down that Scituate player and saved a touchdown. That was good to see."

"If we can get back to forcing teams to make mistakes when they have the ball and then capitalize on those mistakes, we will win plenty of games."

Next up for North Quincy is a non-league road contest against Sharon High School on Saturday afternoon (1 p.m.).

On Sept. 26 the Raiders face former Atlantic Coast League foe Plymouth South HS on the road before getting back into Patriot League play with a home game against Whitman-Hanson HS on Oct. 3.

Bow To Canton 8-7; Host Plymouth South Friday At 7 PM

2nd Single 1-Point Loss For Quincy

By SEAN BRENNAN

The wet weather and driving rain made the football game between Quincy High School and Canton High School last Friday night a bumbling and fumbling mess. And unfortunately for the Presidents, the outcome resulted in an 8-7 non-league loss.

This one-point defeat was the second single point loss in two games for Quincy.

"We are one or two plays away from starting the season undefeated," said Quincy head coach Bill Reardon. "If we can limit some of the mental mistakes that we have been making these first two games we should come out on top more often than not."

Against the Canton Bulldogs, the Presidents trailed 6-0 at the halftime break but midway through the third quarter Quincy capitalized on another Bulldog turnover (the teams combined for eight fumbles and two interceptions). Senior defensive lineman Derek Andrews pounced on the turnover and Quincy started the drive at the Bulldog 15-yard line.

Two plays later, junior running back Ed Joliceur took the handoff from quarterback Lance Peterson and rumbled into the end zone to tie the score at 6-6. Place-kicker Max Devoe's point after attempt (PAT) was good and the Presidents held a 7-6 advantage.

The turnovers continued to mount up for both teams on the next two drives. After Canton received the kickoff following Joliceur's touchdown run, the Bulldogs drove the field but ended up giving the ball back to the Presidents deep in their own end of the field.

On the drive Peterson and his offense stalled out, unable to advance the ball out from the shadow of their own end zone and Reardon was forced to call on his special teams unit to come out and try to punt the ball away. On the long snap to punter Bryan McGee, who was standing in the back of the end zone the wet ball slipped through his hands and a scrum ensued.

The initial call by the game officials was that a Canton player had recovered the loose ball for six points, but after a conference on the field, the referees reversed their call and instead decided that McGee had recovered his own fumble. The result either way didn't help the Presidents as the Bulldogs were credited with a safety (a two point score).

The best chance Quincy had to take back the lead occurred in the fourth quarter. After another Canton turnover gave the Presidents the ball back with about eight minutes to play in the game, Peterson drove his offense all the way down to the Bulldog 35-yard line. On third down and long, Peterson dropped back to throw, but Canton's Jack Lamir at the 24-yard line intercepted his intended pass ending the threat and closing out the game.

The wet and wild contest began with both teams being forced to punt the ball away on their opening drives. But in the second quarter it was Canton that solved the weather issue first.

Bulldog quarterback Matt Wing executed a 12-play, 78-yard drive, which included three passes for 31 yards including an 11-yard touchdown strike with three minutes left in the half that gave Canton the early 6-0 lead.

The final three minutes of play in the opening half was a turnover parade that resulted in a Quincy fumble, a Canton fumble, another Presidents fumble and finally a Canton interception at the Quincy 16-yard line.

"There were a lot of positives that came out of this tough loss," added Reardon. "The kids played hard and tough till the end. But the weather caused some problems with our passing game. Peterson could not get the ball out deep to Anthony Raddatz or any of his other receivers and it slowed down what we were trying to run offensively. But both teams had to deal with the weather so that is not an excuse."

With two one-point losses to open the season, Reardon and his team will look to get that first victory of the year when they play host to Plymouth South High School this Friday night at Veterans Memorial Stadium. Kickoff is scheduled for 7 p.m.

A bye week follows the Plymouth South game, but on Oct. 3 Quincy will open its Patriot League schedule with an away game against Rockland High School.

On Sept. 11, Jim Garabedian, owner of Rocco's Famous Roastbeef & Seafood, 111 Washington Street, Quincy sponsored the QHS football team dinner for the game against Canton.

A Job Well Done

On Friday, September 5, 2008, at approximately 6:15 P.M., Officer Dennis Keenan was dispatched to CVS Pharmacy in Wollaston on a report of a person attempting to obtain a controlled substance by fraud. Officer Keenan interviewed the Pharmacist, who stated that she received a phone call from a female claiming that she worked at a Doctor's office. The female ordered a prescription for 180 Tramadol, a controlled substance that is prescribed for pain. The female ordered the prescription for an alleged patient. The Pharmacist immediately became suspicious due to the amount of the drug being ordered. A call was made to the Doctor's office to confirm the prescription. The Doctor informed CVS that he did not authorize the prescription and that he has never treated the "patient" coming to pick up the prescription.

The Pharmacist told Officer Keenan that a male called CVS to inquire if the prescription was ready. He also asked if he could use his girlfriend's AAA card for a discount when paying for the prescription. The Pharmacist told the suspect that the AAA card could be used. The suspect said he would be at the store in approximately one half hour. Officer Keenan gave the Pharmacist his cell phone number and told her to call when either the female or male suspect arrived to pick up the fraudulent prescription.

At approximately 7:30 P.M., the Pharmacist called and stated that a female and male were at the pharmacy counter attempting to pick up the fraudulent prescription. Officer Keenan was a distance away, so he contacted Officer Roger White and asked him to respond to CVS. Officer White walked up to the counter and detained the male, but the female left the store when she observed him walking towards the pharmacy counter.

Officer Keenan arrived on scene and questioned the male suspect, who appeared to be extremely nervous. After being advised of his Miranda Rights, Officer Keenan asked the suspect what he was doing at CVS. He stated that he was with his girlfriend picking up a prescription for her cousin. When asked where his girlfriend was, the suspect said he didn't know. Officer Keenan asked him what his girlfriend's name and date of birth were and the suspect provided the information. The Officer was familiar with a female who had a similar name and the same date of birth, which made him believe that the suspect was attempting to mislead the investigation.

The suspect was informed that he was a suspect in the crime of obtaining a controlled substance by fraud. The suspect denied doing anything. The Pharmacist then handed Officer Keenan an AAA card with the name of the female suspect on it, adding that the male and female suspect attempted to use the card when paying for the prescription. Officer Keenan asked the suspect what the female was wearing and he said she had black pants and a green shirt.

Officer John McIsaac observed the store security tape and noted that the female suspect wore white capri pants and a black shirt. This furthered Officer Keenan's suspicions that the male suspect was deliberately attempting to mislead the investigation. Officer Keenan then contacted communications and requested a Massachusetts query on the female suspect and this led to a similar name with the date of birth given by the male suspect. This address matched the male suspect's address on Taylor Street in Quincy.

Officer Keenan informed the suspect that he was under arrest for "Obtaining a controlled substance by fraud and Misleading a Police Officer during the investigation of a crime."

Just after the male suspect was transported to the station, Officer Matt Patten located a female matching the suspect's description in the parking lot of the Wollaston MBTA Station. Officer Keenan met up with Officer Patten and the female suspect who was wearing clothes seen on the security tape. Officer Keenan advised her of Miranda Rights and she stated that she understood them and agreed to speak to him. The female suspect admitted that it was her prescription and that she became nervous when she saw Officer White enter CVS. She said she exited the store to avoid the police. Officer Keenan asked her if she was picking up a prescription for her cousin and she stated, "no it was for me." She seemed confused when Officer Keenan spoke of her cousin and stated that she had no idea what he was talking about. The female suspect confessed that she was prescribed Tramadol approximately two years ago for pain and she became addicted to it. She added that she has tried to stop the Tramadol but continues to relapse.

Officer Patten transported the female suspect back to CVS, where the Pharmacist identified her as the female at the pharmacy counter with the male suspect who attempted to obtain a controlled substance by fraud. She was placed under arrest and transported to the station by Officer Patten and charged with "Obtaining a controlled Substance by Fraud." A copy of the false prescription and three photos from the security tape showing the suspects entering the store and standing at the pharmacy counter together were taken as evidence.

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Aspects favor new romances for unpaired Ewes and Rams. Already-paired Arian twosomes experience renewed harmony in their relationships. Money matters also take a bright turn.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) Use that strong Bovine determination to help you keep the faith with your convictions while you move through a period of uncertainty. Things begin to ease by the week's end.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Pay attention to your intuition. It could be alerting you to be more careful about accepting a "statement of fact" simply on trust. Don't be shy about asking for more proof.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) Concern for the well-being of someone in need is admirable. But don't forget to take care of yourself as well. Ask a family member, close friend or colleague to help you.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) It's OK to focus on the demands of your career. But try to avoid misunderstandings by also reaching out to family and friends. Your sharp intuitive sense kicks in by midweek.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Keep a rein on that green-eyed monster. Jealousy is counterproductive. Instead of resenting a colleague's good points, concentrate on developing your own abilities.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Spending time on a creative project during this high-energy week can pay off both in emotional satisfaction and in impressing someone who is glad to see this side of you.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Now is a good time to start planning that trip you've put off because of the demands on your time. Be sure to choose a destination that is new and exciting.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) That upbeat mood in the first part of the week makes you eager to take on new ventures. A more serious note sets in later to help you assess an upcoming decision.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) A high energy level gives the Goat the get-up-and-go to finish outstanding tasks before deadline, leaving time for well-earned fun and games with friends and family.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) Dealing with disappointment is never easy. But the wise Aquarian will use it as a vital lesson and be the better for it. A close friend has something important to say.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Best bet is not to get involved in an argument between colleagues until you know more about who started it and why. And even then, appearances could be deceiving. Be alert.

BORN THIS WEEK: You have creative gifts that inspire those who get to see this sometimes-hidden side of you.

A THOUGHT
FOR THE WEEK

"Nowadays it isn't the little red schoolhouse one comes upon, but the little-read schoolboy." - Cy N. Peace

Reading is magic. It enables us to experience and ponder the past. It helps us to live more happily and wisely in the present. And it permits us to cope with the future...

SCOTT DEWARE

A library, to modify the famous metaphor of Socrates, is the delivery room for the birth of ideas - a place where history comes to life...

Dwight D. Eisenhower, some years back, was quoted as saying "...History records how the living ideas of civilization were saved and nourished behind a wall of books. Our libraries today serve the same cause, for the defenders of freedom must remain strong in mind and heart. From the famous metropolitan libraries of America to the bookmobiles that serve our rural areas, books guard the wisdom of the past and kindle the ideas of tomorrow."

To the little-read schoolboy may we say ... There may be very few little red-schoolhouses left in America today, but remember... so long as there exist public libraries and dedicated librarians there is access to cures, to truths, to understanding, to peaceful pursuits, and to new challenges in the American tradition.

ALICIA GARDNER lets everyone know who she is rooting for amid the throng at the Democratic National Convention in the Pepsi Center in Denver, Colorado.

BILL DELAHUNT shares a moment of relaxation with fellow delegate Alicia Gardner.

MICHAEL MORRISSEY manages to maintain his senatorial dignity in shirt and tie while the conventioners around him lose their's.

CROWD OF 70,000 that heard Barack Obama speak at Vesco Field included Alicia Gardner and Sen. Michael Morrissey.

Delegate Alicia Gardner:

Obama Nomination Was 'Experience Of Lifetime

The Democratic National Convention in Denver that nominated Barack Obama for president was "an experience of a lifetime" to Alicia Gardner, the former city councillor.

"How lucky I am to be witness to such an historic event, the first black man to be nominated by a major political party to be president of the United States," she wrote in her convention diary.

"I felt honored to be there, standing there remembering how so many Americans fought the fight against civil injustice. How happy I was for all those people who have been pushing that rock up that hill for decades."

Gardner, now director of Support Services for Norfolk County Register of Deeds Bill O'Donnell, was one of four Quincy residents who attended the convention as delegates and volunteer.

She was joined by Congressman Bill Delahunt, Senator Michael Morrissey and Francis Orlando, volunteer for the State Democratic Party and an aide to Senator Morrissey.

Throughout the five day gathering at Pepsi Center and Invesco Field, Gardner kept a convention diary of her activities and emotions as she rubbed shoulders with the party elite.

By ALICIA GARDNER

Monday, Day One – Breakfast between 7 and 9 a.m. I picked up my credentials for that night's convention session at the Pepsi Center.

The first morning's guest speaker as former U. S. Senator Gary Hart. I introduced myself and informed him that our mutual friend, Paul Harold, had framed and hung Senator Hart's thank you note to Paul for his and his wife's stay at Paul's home on Martha's Vineyard.

I reminded Senator Hart that it doesn't get any better than Martha's Vineyard when vacationing. I never miss an opportunity to put a good word in for Quincy or the state of Massachusetts. You get asked all the time where you are from and I would say just south of Boston, Quincy, the City of Presidents.

I was amazed how many people recognized it and commented on the Adams family. Another nice remark I heard quite a bit was, Boston ran a great convention in 2004, we loved the city. It was nice to hear.

After breakfast Senator Morrissey informs me that we are going bike riding.

Free bikes were being offered all over the city. Not having been on a bike in 30 years, I wasn't quite sure but it was a wonderful time. Denver has beautiful bike/pedestrian path along the Cherry Creek; we rode out to Invesco Field and back, round trip was about five miles.

The highlight of the night was Senator Edward M. Kennedy. What a great surprise that he was there. A very emotional event, the true love, respect and admiration for the senator throughout the entire convention hall was wonderful. We ere in Massachusetts love him but to see the response from the rest of the country's state delegation was so gratifying.

Tuesday, Day Two – Breakfast between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m. I picked up my credentials for that night's convention session at the Pepsi Center.

I saw Al Franken, who is running for the U.S. Senate from Minnesota. He's the former comedian who used to be on Saturday Night Live. Someone's cell phone went off and he commented "That liver better be for you."

A group of us then went out to Golden, the original state capital of Colorado when it was still a territory. Its motto is "Where the West Still Lives." It is also the home of Coors Beer. Unfortunately, the brewery was closed to tours on Tuesday and Wednesday, but we found a great T-shirt shop for all my non-political family members who would rather have a "Colorado" shirt than an "Obama" shirt. I didn't have to buy many.

That night at the convention, Senator Hillary Clinton made a great speech. "No Way. No How. No McCain."

Wednesday, Day Three – Breakfast between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m. I picked up my credential for that night's convention session at the Pepsi Center.

The morning's guest speaker was former U.S. Senator George McGovern. This was a particular treat for me because Senator McGovern was the first man I ever voted for at 18 years of age for president of the United States. At Invesco Field on Thursday evening I was able to tell him that personally and have a picture taken with him.

After breakfast I did some more "button" shopping. I didn't find a button, shirt or hat I didn't like.

It was a big afternoon. We were going to see Senator Hillary Clinton at the Denver Convention Center. It was a pledged delegate to Senator Clinton. The room was packed but I persisted in getting close to the podium. She thanked all of us for our support and then announced that she was releasing us from our obligation. She then informed us that she had cast her vote for Senator Obama. She was gracious and she has a good sense of humor as well.

At night, former President Clinton spoke and people would not stop clapping and cheering for him.. Another great speech.

Thursday, Day Four – Secretary of State Bill Galvin was the morning's guest speaker. Then it was off to the Rocky Mountains with Senator Morrissey, Senator Harriett Chandler of Worcester, Senator Karen Spilka of Ashland, and Representative Jamie Eldridge of Acton.

We went about an hour and a half outside of Denver to Georgetown and went through the Guanella Pass. It was spectacular country; the air was pristine; the sky was a brilliant blue; a picture perfect day to go up into the Rockies. I will say that our Presidential Range in New Hampshire may be a bit smaller but it does not take a back seat as to its beauty and scenery.

Friday, Day Five – The convention moved to Invesco Field. I arrived via the delegate shuttle bus. There were no problems getting in or finding our seats on the field. Massachusetts was left of the stage at about the 10 or 15 yard line. It was open seating instead of the assigned seating for the first three days of the convention.

I sat right in front of the Dukakis family. I introduced myself to the governor and Mrs. Dukakis and reminded him of our mutual friend, Pat Toland. Pat and the governor were good friends. Then I had my picture taken with the governor.

It was an incredibly gorgeous night. When I looked around the stadium, I saw more than 70,000 people. It made me feel very small but at the same time very special. How lucky I am to be witness to such an historic event, the first black man to be nominated by a major political party to be president of the United States.

I felt honored to be there, standing there remembering how so many Americans fought the fight against civil injustice. How happy I was for all those people who have been pushing that rock up that hill for decades. It truly was an experience of a lifetime.

Federal Government Share Is $4 Million Council Votes $1 Million For Broad Meadows Restoration Project

City Councillors unanimously approved a $1 million appropriation for the restoration of Broad Meadows, the 100-acre salt marsh at the head of Town River.

James Fatseas, Chief of Staff for Mayor Thomas Koch, said that work should begin in November with the Army Corps of Engineers heading up the project.

The federal government will cover approximately $4 million in restoration costs through a partnership agreement with the city.

Under the agreement the city pays 25 percent of the costs while the federal government through the Army Corps of Engineers pays 75 percent of the cost.

Ward 1 Councillor Leo Kelly who has worked for years with three mayors for the revitalization of the 100-acre salt marsh said he was delighted with Monday's vote.

Kelly called the area 'the most beautiful open space anywhere," and outlined a half dozen recreational activities, such as canoeing and kayaking, that could be enjoyed when the project is complete.

In addition, Kelly said Broad Meadows is a place where a person can "have a still moment."

Koch's Director of Policy Chris Walker recently out-lined the project for the council and commended Kelly's work and persistence toward the success of the Broad Meadows restoration.

On Joining State Program

City Unions' Insurance Vote Deadline Oct. 1

By LAURA GRIFFIN

City union members must decide in the next seven days whether or not to join the state's health insurance program, the Group Insurance Commission known as the G.I.C.

The annual deadline for the decision is Oct. 1. That's next Wednesday.

"It could come down to the last minute," Paul Phillips, president of the Quincy teachers' union, said Tuesday, describing the many factors affecting the decision.

Phillips would not even predict how the QEA will vote Wednesday when the issue is put to his 900 members.

"If they vote no, it's all over," Phillips said, referring to the 39 percent clout his union carries in the decision.

However, if the teachers do approve the G.I.C., then a half dozen other smaller unions, such as the police patrolmen's union, the firefighters and the parks department employees will provide the decisive votes.

Those votes could be days away. Some unions have not even scheduled a vote.

Proponents of the state health plan claim it could save the city $5 million annually in employee health insurance costs and save employees themselves millions in premiums.

At the same time, skeptics question the savings to the city, charge that the changes will hurt the most vulnerable, and that the city's employees will lose their voice in choice, coverage and payments.

City Councillors Monday voted 8-1 to approve the city's move to the G.I.C. Several councillors said their vote was necessary to insure that employees could approve the G.I.C. in the next week.

Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee viewed his vote as "not an endorsement of the G.I.C. (but) a procedural way to let this move forward."

City Council President Jay Davis supported the vote and a move to the G.I.C., noting the millions in potential savings for the city in health insurance costs as WORKERS REPLACE the roof at the Dunkin Donuts outlet at 95 Franklin St. The renovated building will have more than a dozen new spaces for drive-thru customers who have been lining up on Franklin Street in the past.

Will Soon Be Open

Facelift For Dunkin' Donuts At Franklin Street Shop

Caffeine deprived commuters can rest assured that their Dunkin Donuts coffee stop on Franklin Street will open again.

For a week, it appeared that the Dunkin Donuts building had been demolished and nothing stood in its place.

Dunkin Donuts will reopen and Building Commissioner Jay Duca expects that the renovated building will be much improved for customers and for rush hour drivers.

"They have a permit to remodel it completely," Duca said, adding that contractors are replacing the old tar and gravel roof and rafters with a new roof and replacing exterior brick walls with glass windows to the 1971 structure.

"Basically, it will be the same building," Duca said.

The most significant change will be for the drive-thru line, according to Duca. He said the drive-thru queue on the property will be increased substantially "...to at least 15 vehicles."

Until now, the drive-thru lane snaked onto Franklin Street slowing traffic, particularly in the morning.

Now, instead of two or three cars in a line and the rest on the street, there will be more than a dozen on the property.

Duca said that he believes the expanded space on the property will ease the traffic congestion, particularly during the morning rush.

$1.3 Million State-Of-The-Art Quincy College Unveils 3 New Science Labs

Quincy College has unveiled three, new state-of-the-art science laboratories housed at a Saville Hall, 24 Saville Avenue in Quincy Center.

The laboratories, which occupy 6,000 square feet, are the culmination of a year-long design and construction project, costing the college $1.3 million.

Each laboratory focuses on specific areas of scientific study, namely microbiology-biology, chemis-try/ forensic science/physics, and anatomy and physiology. Space has been earmarked for future expansion into clinical laboratory science, a program scheduled to be launched in the fall of 2009.

"In funding these labs, the Quincy College Board of Governors made a major commitment to the development of the college's educational future. These science labs allow for expansion in our science programs and provide natural science students with first class learning environments," said President Sue Harris. "We're very excited about the additional learning opportunities these labs, our strong natural science faculty, and our new Lab Coordinator can provide for our students-both now and in the future."

The laboratories are designed to accommodate both traditional and virtual scientific experimentation. The wireless, computer-equipped laboratories allow students to brainstorm solutions to physics problems, observe cell animations, and perform virtual dissections. A custom designed, two-sided fume hood allows students and faculty to observe experiments from two vantage points.

Dr. Laura Corina has been named the new Coordinator of Science Labora-to-ries. She received a Ph.D in Plant Science/Molecular Biology from the University of Texas at Austin and was a postdoctoral research fellow at Brigham & Women's Hospital and Harvard Medical School at the Center for Neurologic Diseases. Dr. Corina has over 10 years experience as a scientist and professor. She joined the Quincy College faculty as an adjunct professor in 2007.

Quincy Collage, a fully accredited two-year open access institution offers 19 Associate Degree and nine Certificate programs. Some of the programs offered include Allied Health, Phlebotomy, Surgical Technology, Nursing, Liberal Arts, Business, Computer Science, and Education.

For more information, contact the Admissions Office at 6 17-984-1710 (Quincy) or 508-747-0400 (Plymouth).

Boston Seeking Permits For Long Island Bridge Repairs

The Boston Conservation Commission will hold a public hearing Wednesday, Oct. 1, at 7:30 p.m. in Boston City Hall to set wetland conditions for repair work to the Long Island Bridge.

The bridge, which spans the bay between Boston-owned Moon and Long Islands, is accessible by land only through the Squantum section of Quincy.

The city of Boston Public Works Department is gathering permits for a future project repairing the steel superstructure and deck of the 57-year-old bridge, which is within the 100-foot buffer zone of the coast.

The Conservation Commission is empowered to set conditions that would protect the water supply, prevent pollution, control flooding, prevent storm damage and protect fisheries and land containing shellfish.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Sept. 23, 1875, 15-year-old Billy the Kid (born William Henry McCarty) is arrested for the first time for hiding a bag of stolen laundry as a joke. When Billy was literally caught holding the bag, a Silver City, N.M., policeman threw him in jail to teach him a lesson.

• On Sept. 22, 1914, in the North Sea, a German U-9 submarine sinks three British cruisers, killing 1,400 British sailors. More sophisticated than submarines built by other nations, the typical German U-boat was 214 feet long and could travel underwater for two hours at a time.

• On Sept. 27, 1935, 13-year-old singer and actress Judy Garland (born Frances Gumm) signs her first contract with MGM. Garland and her sisters toured the vaudeville circuit as "The Gumm Sisters' Kiddie Act." The sisters later took the stage name Garland, and Frances changed her name to Judy when she was 10.

• On Sept. 25, 1965, the Kansas City Athletics start 59-year-old Satchel Paige in a game against the Boston Red Sox. Paige gave up only one hit in his three innings of play. "Satchel" got his nickname as a boy while working as a luggage carrier at the Mobile, Ala., train station.

• On Sept. 28, 1978, Car & Driver magazine editor Don Sherman sets a Class E speed record at the Bonneville Salt Flats in Utah, reaching 183.9 mph driving a Mazda RX7. The RX7's unique rotary engine didn't have the standard pistons; instead, two rounded "rotors" spun to turn the fly-wheel.

• On Sept. 24, 1989, Broadway theaters dim their lights in honor of composer Irving Berlin. Berlin had died two days earlier at the age of 101. He wrote 1,500 songs, including "Puttin' on the Ritz" and "God Bless America."

• On Sept. 26, 1996, astronaut Shannon Lucid returns to Earth in the U.S. space shuttle Atlantis following six months in orbit aboard the Russian space station Mir. Her 188-day sojourn aboard Mir set a new space endurance record for an American and a world endurance record for a woman.

... And 46,756 Stayed Home

Last week's state primary election may have been Lan historic one.

In the wrong way.

Only 13.6 percent of Quincy's 53,967 registered voters actually voted.

That means 7,211 cast ballots and 46,756 stayed home.

Of those voting, 6,624 were Democrats, 585 Republicans, and two members of Working Families Party. No Green-Rainbow Party members showed up.

"I've never seen anything like it," says City Clerk Joseph Shea, who has been around City Hall some 20 years or so. "I have never heard of such a low turnout. This could have been the lowest ever."

It was, you could say, a ho-hum election. Nothing to excite the voters. Just two contests on the Democratic ballot and none on the Republican.

Nothing to make you want to rush to the ballot box.

Shea says a lack of local level contests was another big reason voters stayed home.

Running unopposed were Quincy Democrats, Congressman William Delahunt, state Senator Michael Morrissey, state Reps. Bruce Ayers, Ronald Mariano and Steve Tobin.

Also unchallenged were two other Quincy Democrats, Register of Probate Patrick McDermott and County Commissioner John Gillis.

"A few local contests would have brought out a lot more voters," says Shea.

Senator John Kerry and Governor's Councillor John Iannella, Jr., the only two Democrats in primary contests, turned back their challengers.

The only two names on the Republican ballot were Jeffrey Beatty of Harwich, running for the U.S. Senate and Thomas Gorman of Dedham, candidate for Norfolk County Commissioner.

Shea was disappointed by the slim turnout but sees the Nov. 4 Presidential election a big improvement.

George Bush and Al Gore brought out 72 percent in 2000 and Bush and Kerry 69 percent in 2004.

"I think it will be 72 to 75 percent in November," Shea says.

He points to the heated-and getting hotter-campaign between Barack Obama and John McCain. And the fact we may have our first in history black president or our first woman vice president in Sarah Palin.

He reminds those who are not registered voters have until Oct. 15 to do so to vote in the Presidential election.

INCIDENTALLY, there are three referendum questions on the Nov. 4 ballot that should help perk voter interest:

State Personal Income Tax: Whether to reduce the state personal income rate to 2.65 percent beginning Jan. 1, 2009 and eliminate it on or after Jan. 1, 2010.

Possession of Marijuana: Whether to replace the criminal penalties for possession of one ounce or less of marijuana with a new system of civil penalties.

Dog Racing: Whether to prohibit dog races on which there is betting, effective Jan. 1, 2010.

WARD 6, Precinct 5 (Squantum School) had held top voting honors for some 15 years.

But last Tuesday the honor went to Ward 2, Precinct 2 (1000 Southern Artery), 511 to 486.

GLOUCESTER lawyer Edward O'Reilly, John Kerry's first Democratic challenger in 24 years, fared better in Quincy than he did in the state.

Statewide, Kerry cruised to victory with approximately 67.1 percent of the vote to O'Reilly's 33.1 percent.

Here in Quincy, though, the percentage was Kerry 58.17 and O'Reilly 41.17 percent.

O'Reilly took four precincts here: Ward 3, Precinct 3, Ward 3, Precinct 4, Ward 4, Precinct 2 and Ward 4, Precinct 4.

OOPS DEPT: In last week's column I noted that no woman has been elected mayor in Quincy although four have tried.

And went on to mention that most of the 30 men elected came out of the city council.

Latest exception, I said, was William Phelan who ran as a second-year school committee member in 2001 and upset incumbent James Sheets.

I guess I was so focused on the past that I forgot the latest exception is really Tom Koch who upset Phelan last year.

Koch was executive secretary to Sheets and headed the Park Department but never served in the city council.

Sorry about that, Mr. Mayor.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1911 real photo postcard view of the Boston Gear Works factory building at 14 Hayward Street in Norfolk Downs. The saw tooth roof was a popular design for factory buildings at the same time. It featured windows for letting in light that could be opened for ventilation. The first Boston Gear Works building on this site was built in 1906 but it was completely destroyed by fire in 1909. This building replaced it. In 1977, the portion of this building to the left of the flagpole was demolished but the firewall to its right remains the façade of the office headquarters of Altra Industrial Motion, Inc., the present owner of Boston Gear Works. The Boston Gear operations are now located in Charlotte, N.C. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Brett Hannon Exchange Mayoral Campaign Barbs

By FRANK MCCAULEY

Contenders Joseph E. Brett and Walter J. Hannon began their stretch drive for the mayor's office this week, firing political barbs at one another enroute.

And there were indications that whoever wins on Nov. 2 Quincy may end up with a full-time mayor.

Hannon, in a Quincy Sun interview, disclosed:

"I don't believe I would seek reelection when my term (state representative) runs out."

Brett, also in a Sun interview, re-affirmed his pledge to resign his House seat if elected mayor and chided Hannon for "leaving the door wide open" on the matter.

Hannon, a Republican who topped (11,109) the mayoral field in the primary, and Brett, a Democrat (7,338 votes) differed sharply on voters and supporters crossing party lines in a non-partisan city election.

MCCORMICK ENDORSEMENT STILL UP IN THE AIR

Asked to comment on the election, School Committee Vice-Chairman James F. McCormick, Sr., defeated in the primary election in his bid for mayor, said:

"The public has spoken. That's the end of it-like everything else, there are other times."

"I am not ready to make any statement at this time," on the matter of endorsing one of the two candidates in the final election.

"I WILL RUN AGAIN," SAYS RITA ANDERSON

Mrs. Rita Anderson, 2 Shawmut Place, West Quincy, when asked for a comment on the city primary election in which she was defeated as a mayoral candidate, declared:

"I am very happy. It was encouraging since I am not known and to be up against three candidates like I was-and I had only one relative in the whole city-I feel those citizens who voted for me voted for a particular reason."

Mrs. Anderson will not endorse either Walter Hannon or Joseph Brett, she said.

Marie's Kitchen

By MARIE D'OLIMPIO

Apple-Raisin Muffin

Here are two delicious dessert recipes that you absolutely do not count calories. They are good for the soul as well as the stomach.

One is a recipe for a great tasting apple muffin and the other is one I invented one night when my little granddaughters had a sleepover, and were dying to have something chocolate. It is a no-bake dessert.

Apple-Raisin Muffins

- 2 cups apples (grated)
- 2 cups raisins
- 2 sticks butter
- 2 cups sugar
- 3 cups flour
- 2 teaspoons baking soda
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
- 1/2 teaspoon cloves

Sauté the two sticks of butter. Grate the apples and add them and the raisins to the butter. Cook and blend for a couple of minutes. Add the sugar turning until blended. Add the flour and baking soda. Place in muffin tins and bake in a 350-degree oven for 20-25 minutes depending on the size of the muffin tin.

Devil Dog Sundae

Here is the other recipe for all chocolate lovers.

- Devil Dog Sundae
- Devil dog
- Chocolate ice cream
- Whipped cream
- Chocolate fudge sauce

Take a devil dog and remove the top. Add chocolate ice cream. Put the top back on and heat up the fudge sauce and pour over the top. Then add the whipped cream. Notice that I have not measured any of the ingredients because you can use as much as you want.

The little darlings loved it and now ask me to make them when they visit.

ARC OF THE South Shore's Art from the Heart artists were awarded the Award of Excellence from the Quincy Art Association for their heartwarming creations at the 11th Annual Quincy ArtsFest. This exhibit spotlighted the artistic talents of children and adults with intellectual and developmental disabilities who are benefiting from The Arc of the South Shore program. Nadia Brupbacher of Quincy (left), a Harbor Industries employee, an Arc of the South Shore vocational program; and Marion Fitzsimmons of Weymouth (right), Quincy ArtsFest community outreach coordinator stand in front of the art work. Opening its doors in 1986, The Quincy Art Association, Inc. is a nonprofit organization dedicated to supporting the visual arts, artists, enthusiasts and art education. The association initiated the successful Quincy ArtsFest exhibition, now in its 11th year, and has raised $1,200 for the Arts Scholarship fund.

Joseph & His Dreamcoat At Children's Choir Camp

Sacred Heart Parish of North Quincy-Squantum recently concluded its second Children's Choir Camp with a performance of the Biblical story of Joseph and his brothers, told in narration and song by the participants.

The children worked on singing as a unified chorus with emphasis on breathing, vocal sound production and projection. Rehearsals featured 13 songs from Andrew Lloyd Webber's "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat."

Essentials of melody and rhythm were experienced through the use of Boomwhackers, a series of graduated tone tubes that produce a note by whacking them on the floor, on a chair, or even off an arm or a leg.

The youngsters took an active part in preparing the scenery for their closing presentation by coloring three line drawing panels with varied hues of sidewalk chalk. The panels depicted Joseph and scenes from the story.

John DiStefano, a professor at MassArt in Boston, created a "coat of many colors" which was camouflaged as they read their parts of the story narration to a full house in the parish convent's chapel.

All in attendance were invited to a make-your-own sundae party and a special homemade theme cake after the performance.

The week-long camp also featured fun activities like a liturgical scavenger hunt in which the campers were challenged to answer more than 40 questions with clues scattered from the choir loft to the sanctuary to the lower church.

Each day began with a daily prayer; the Angelus was held before each noon-time meal; and an evening prayer was sung with candles decorated by each child. Children and leaders attended Mass on Monday and Friday at Our Lady Chapel on Hancock St.

The Children's Choir Camp is the concept of Howard Lotis, musical director and liturgical coordinator at Sacred Heart Parish.

He was assisted by teachers, school nurses and teacher aides who volunteered --- Patricia McGilvray, Elaine Haraska, Jane Halloran and Susan Graceffa.

QMC Offers Volunteer Opportunities For Retired Healthcare Professionals

Between doctors, nurses, aides, technologists, case-workers and others, the medical needs of patients at Quincy Medical Center (QMC) are clearly covered.

Sometimes, however, patients, particularly those in pain, need a little something more than medicine, as simple as a kind word of concern, to help them during their stay.

That is why QMC's Pain Management Task Force and a group of specially trained volunteers began making rounds with the "Comfort Cart." Part of QMC's Compassion in Action program, the Comfort Cart is a portable resource that can be wheeled to a patient's room and offers a variety of items, such as books, shawls, and tapes, aimed at easing pain and anxiety. The program is currently recruiting volunteers, particularly those with a healthcare background, to support the program.

"We've found that many patients seem to benefit simply from having someone just spend some time with them, and they don't even take an item from the cart. The cart has become a vehicle to open dialogue and connect with patients," says Laura Klint, RPh, task force member. "This is a perfect opportunity for someone with a healthcare background, such as retired nurses, aides or therapists, to volunteer in a one-on-one capacity with patients."

Volunteers receive training and round with a staff member before they begin their "solo" visits. During their rounds, volunteers visit patients who have been identified by the nursing staff as needing a little extra support. "We work closely with the nursing and medical staff to determine which patients will benefit most by a visit," says Klint.

"The response from patients has been wonderful. They are just so appreciative of the fact that someone is stopping by just to see how they are doing and if they are comfortable."

The program was developed with start-up funds donated by the City Hospital of Quincy Corporation, a private charitable organization established to support the Medical Center during its former days as a public, city-owned hospital. Since the program began in 2007, others have been inspired to support the program with other items needed to outfit the cart.

For example, students at Quincy High School sewed a supply lavender eye pillows, a group of Girl Scouts delivered hand-made pillows and South Suburban Oncology Center has donated special sleeper chairs so that patients' family members can use them when needed.

To find out more about how to be a Quincy Medical Center Comfort Cart Volunteer, call Laura Klint at 617-376-5463.

John Quincy Adams Re-Enactment, Tour At First Parish Sept. 27

Jim Cooke will impersonate John Quincy Adams, Saturday, Sept. 27 at the Church of the Presidents.

The performance entitled, "John Quincy Adams, A Spirit Unconquerable," will begin at 7:30 p.m. at United First Parish Church, 1306 Hancock St. at 7:30 p.m.

Doors will open at 7 p.m. and refreshments will be available. A tour of the Adams' crypts will follow the performance.

Tickets are $20 in advance and $25 at the door. All proceeds will benefit the restoration and maintenance of this historic church.

Cooke will play Adams at 70 years of age and portray his achievements as a

JIM COOKE

United States congressman until his death at 81.

During his final years, Adams helped defeat the 'gag rule' developed by Southern legislators, which was aimed at preventing debate on petitions against slavery.

As a lawyer, Adams, also, successfully defended imprisoned Africans who mutinied on the slave ship Amistad.

Cooke won international recognition for his portrayal of Adams when he toured Russia for the U.S. state department in 2007 when the countries commemorated the 200th anniversary of diplomatic relations between the two countries.

For more than 20 years, Cooke has, also, done solo re-enactments of historical figures like Presidents Calvin Coolidge and John Quincy Adams.

Children's Choir Formed At First Presbyterian Church

First Presbyterian Church of Quincy has formed a Children's Choir for all children in the area in Grades 3 through 5.

The purpose of the choir is to provide vocal and musical training, as well as performance experience for children not just from the Church, but from the community as well.

The choir will be directed by Allen Thomas, former Supervisor of Music for Holbrook Public Schools and Director of Music at First Presbyterian for the past 14 years, who has considerable experience with vocal music, particularly the training and development of young voices. He will be assisted by Val Levarity, a retired teacher from Quincy Public Schools with over 30 years experience with elementary age children.

Activities or the year will include a Christmas concert, a spring drama/musical, and performance on Sunday mornings at First Presbyterian, every 4 to 6 weeks. As the choir grows, we will be looking to perform at community venues outside of the Church. The Choir rehearses on Wednesdays from 5 to 5 p. at the church, 270 Franklin St., Quincy. The program is free.

For more information, call the church office weekdays between 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 617-773-5575.

Ex-Mayor Flynn's Condition 'Good'

Former Boston Mayor Ray Flynn was in "good" condition at St. Elizabeth's Medical Center Tuesday a week after he collapsed during a Theology on Tap religious discussion at Bad Abbotts bar in Quincy Center.

Flynn, who turned 69 in July and has been suffering from melanoma or skin cancer, was about 30 minutes into his talk before a hot roomful of some 125 people last Wednesday when he keeled over.

He was rushed to St. Elizabeth's in Boston where tests were still being conducted a week later.

Flynn was mayor of Boston from 1984 to 1993 when he resigned in mid-term to become President Bill Clinton's ambassador to the Vatican from 1993 to 1997.

He is presently national chairman of Catholic Citizenship, an organization that seeks a common ground between faith and politics.

Images Of Honor And Memory:

A Visual Tribute At the 11th Annual QMC Cancer Walk

The Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk Committee announces for the seventh year, Images of Honor and Memory will be on display during the 11th Annual QMC Cancer Walk Sunday, Sept. 28 at Pageant Field in Merrymount Park.

Images of Honor and Memory is a visual tribute representing the profound impact cancer has had on the community.

Last year, more than 500 Images of Honor and Memory containers filled the Ruth Gordon Amphitheatre, adjacent to Pageant Field, during the Walk. The display features pink, blue and white sand-filled containers, each adorned with a name of the person who is being honored or remembered. White containers honor cancer survivors; pink and blue containers memorialize individuals who have lost their lives to cancer.

This year, a brief interfaith service will be held before the start of the Walk, which begins at 9:30 a.m. The service will be led by Rev. Esther Bowen, QMC Director of Pastoral Care, and will honor survivors and remember those who have passed.

The QMC Cancer Walk benefits the Marie A. Curry Fund, a permanent endowed fund at Quincy Medical Center, focused on encouraging prevention and early detection of cancer and enhancing access to vital cancer screenings and services for men and women, regardless of their ability to pay.

Images of Honor and Memory containers are available with a $5 suggested donation. Order forms can be picked up at Quincy Medical Center or by calling 617-376-5493 or 617-376-5495. Visit www.quincymc.org for additional Walk information or to download a Walk pledge sheet.

Quincy Medical Center is a 196-bed acute care community-teaching hospital providing South Shore residents with comprehensive medical and surgical services. The medical center's Alliance for Quality Disposal Diapers Problem?

Council Approves $300,000 For Beechwood Sewage Repairs

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Diapers likely clogged the sewer system at the former Beechwood On The Bay, Ward 6 City Councillor Brian McNamee told fellow councillors Monday.

McNamee suggested that disposable "diapers going into the system burned out the pump" at the former daycare center.

Whatever the cause, the sewer system failed and can not be repaired without a new pumping station.

As a result, City Councillors Monday unanimously approved a $300,000 appropriation for a new pump station for the former Myles Standish School on East Quantum Street, North Quincy.

The building which housed the Beechwood On the Bay community center for more than decade will reopen in November as the city's senior center and administration offices for the health department.

However, sewer system problems must be solved before that occurs, according to Brian Carlisle, Superintendent of the Water Department, and Health Commissioner Drew Scheele.

The sewer system for the building has long since collapsed and the pump failed, according to Carlisle.

Carlisle said that, over the years, the city has used a "number of Band-Aids" to ease the sewage problem, but nothing has worked for any length of time.

Scheele cited backups and sanitary issues as did Carlisle who described environmental impacts from the pump failures.

Ward 5 Councillor Doug Gutro noted that the entire $300,000 will be spent on sewer improvements for the one building which will become a senior center.

Gutro said it was important to track "how much money we're spending (on the new senior center)."

McNamee asked Jim Fatseas, chief of staff for Mayor Thomas Koch to squelch rumors that a methadone clinic will be opened at the center.

Fatseas said the building will house a senior center and the health department offices, "There will absolutely not be a methadone clinic."

Councillor Joseph Finn also cited the high $300,000 cost of the pump for the one building, "This is a pretty significant cost."

Finn reminded councillors that "one of the great advantages" of locating the senior center at the former school was the savings.

Finn asked that Fatseas prepare a report on the "true costs of conversion," and include sources of the funds, such as a recent federal grant.

Carlisle said that the city would have to repair the sewer system for anyone using the building.

Bodies In Motion At South Shore YMCA

Thanks to a $30,000 grant from the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, residents at Vinfen's Hancock Nursing & Rehabilitation Center in Dorchester are getting themselves into tip-top shape.

Through the Bodies in Motion program, they're working out regularly at the South Shore YMCA in Quincy, using specialized equipment designed for people with physical limitations.

The Department of Public Health's "Resident Empowerment Grant" pays for the lease on a van (for the six-mile trip to Quincy) and group memberships for a dozen Hancock Center residents.

The van makes three weekly trips, with six Hancock Center residents aboard. Bodies in Motion has become so popular that residents participate in the program on a rotating basis.

"Although we do not have scientific data, we have seen a remarkable improvement in participating residents' mood, behavior and overall affect," said Susan Habchy, Hancock's Director of Behavioral Health Services. "This is just an incredible program for our residents."

Bodies in Motion offers adaptive exercise equipment and knowledgeable staff, enabling individuals with physical disabilities to get the best workout they can. For example, a specialized exercise bike sends an electrical current into the rider's legs, stimulating the muscles needed to pedal the bike.

Sonia Scott, a wheelchair-bound Hancock Center resident with multiple sclerosis, is able to pedal away and get the benefits of an aerobic workout, which would otherwise be impossible.

Some Hancock residents use the adaptive equipment and others work out on the standard exercise machines. Hancock Center occupational therapist Pat Mackenzie and Tony Beaumont, a restorative aide, also make use of the South Shore Y to enhance the treatment programs of residents in need of skilled rehabilitation services.

Bodies in Motion has been running for the past year and Habchy is pleased to report that the Hancock Center will be participating in 2009 as well. In addition to the obvious advantages health-wise, there are other major benefits.

"The residents have an absolute ball over there," said Habchy. "They just love it!"

New Tourism Boost Seen From 'John Adams' 13 Emmys

By TOM HENSHAW

The mortal remains of John Adams may have been in his tomb for 10, these 182 years but to Quincy he is the gift that keeps on giving.

The HBO mini-series "John Adams" swept up 13 Emmys over the weekend and Mark Carey, executive director of Discover Quincy, says he expects the success to spark another boost in what's left of the tourist season.

"And the best is yet to come," he said, "when the mini-series goes on free TV. Remember, HBO goes to a limited audience. When it is sold to broadcast TV, probably next spring, +everyone can watch.

"I expect the effect of the mini-series on tourism will last three to five years."

Accurate totals won't be in for a while but Carey figures the number of visitors to the Adams National Historical Park probably will hit 100,000 or more with two months left in the season.

"Even those numbers don't include the ones who were turned away because they couldn't handle them," he said. "They were turning away as many as 100 to 150 a day in the midst of the tourist season."

"This is what happens all the time at Jefferson's Monticello and Washington's Mt. Vernon but it's happening here for the first time."

"Even the people who drove here from Albany or Springfield and couldn't get in stayed around for a while, visiting First Parish Church or Marina Bay and using the restaurants and the stores."

Carey said he thinks of the HBO mini-series' attraction to tourist in four phases.

Phase One was the original showing on HBO; Phase Two was the release of the DVD; Phase Three is the 23 Emmy nominations, 13

PAUL GIAMATTI and Laura Linney as Emmy-award winners John and Abigail Adams in the HBO mini-series "John Adams."

LAURA LINNEY

as did three of its stars, Paul Giamatti as John; Laura Linney as Abigail; and Tom Wilkinson, best supporting actor as Benjamin Franklin

11th Annual Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk Set for Sunday

The 11th Annual Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk will be held Sunday, Sept. 28 at Pageant Field in Merrymount Park in Quincy.

Registration begins at 8 a.m., and the four-mile, non-competitive walk starts at 9:30 a.m.

The QMC Cancer Walk Committee is lead by Chairman of the QMC Board of Trustees Bob Curry, of Curry ACE Hardware, and Honorary Chairman Hank Bradley, director of Quincy Veterans Services. Boston Medical Center and Curry Ace Hardware are presenting sponsors of the 2008 QMC Cancer Walk.

"This is a great event for the hospital and for the community," said Curry. "Last year, approximately 1,500 people participated and raised more than $201,000. This year, our goal is to raise $300,000 for the Curry Fund through corporate sponsors, individual walkers, walk teams and matching gifts."

The Marie A. Curry Fund at Quincy Medical Center (QMC) was established in 1995 by the Curry family of Quincy as a lasting, living memorial to their wife and mother who died of breast cancer. Marie's family and the City of Quincy's Mayor's Commission on Women joined together in 1998 to create a walk to support the Curry Fund. Nearly $1.5-million has been raised for the Curry Fund since its inception. Now in its 11th year, the QMC Cancer Walk supports the Fund's mission to:

- promote the early detection and prevention of a wide range of cancers;
- ensure that women and men in our community who have the need can access free and potentially life-saving cancer screenings;
- purchase state-of-the-art medical equipment to detect cancer; and

- fund cancer education programs for caregivers.

The post-walk celebration at Pageant Field will include lunch provided by a variety of local restaurants, including Outback Steakhouse and Chipotle Mexican Grill of Quincy, as well as a family-friendly Safety and Health Fair organized in conjunction with the Quincy Police Department. The fair will offer a variety of health screenings, information and giveaways, as well as demonstrations by local, state and federal law enforcement agencies. There will be child car seat installations and inspections, auto glass etching (which can save up to 15% on auto insurance), and free fingerprinting and videotaping through the Child Identification Program (MYCHIP) provided by the Rural Lodge of Freemasons in Quincy and the QPD. In addition, the Children's Hospital bloodmobile will be on-site for the Glennon Family blood drive.

Individuals or teams can pre-register and/or fundraiser for the QMC Cancer Walk on-line at www.firstgiving.com/qmccancerwalk, pick up a pledge sheet at Quincy Medical Center and in businesses throughout the community, or download a pledge form at www.quincymc.org.

In addition, there are many volunteer opportunities in the weeks leading up to the Walk and on the day of the event. For additional information about the QMC Cancer Walk, contact Lola Tom in the Quincy Medical Center Development Office at 617-376-5493 or email ltom@quincymc.org.

BUNIONS

If you notice the base of your larger toe sticking out, you probably have a bunion. The skin that covers the bunion may be red and tender, and wearing shoes can be painful. The pressure from the big toe pushing on the other toes may actually force the second toe to overlap the third toe. Untreated bunions can lead to bursitis and even arthritis. Add bunions to the list of problems that can be caused by wearing ill-fitting shoes, especially those that are too tight in the toes. Prevention is the best medicine, so wear shoes that give your feet enough space, and avoid high heels. If bunion pain is making it difficult to walk, you may need surgery. It is important that bunions be recognized early and evaluated by a podiatrist. We can then offer suggestions on controlling their cause so that symptoms do not arise or become more severe. Recommendations may include exercise, a change in footwear, orthotics, medication, and surgery. Let us do what we do best - diagnose and treat your particular foot problems with compassion, knowledge, and up-to-date techniques and equipment. Please call us for an appointment at 781-986-3668, QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221. P.S. More than half of the women in America have bunions.

Mums In Bloom At Quincy Farmers' Market

The Farmers' Market is blooming in the fall bronzes, golds and bright maroons of locally grown chrysanthemums or "mums" and fall and winter vegetables, such as apples, pears and butter-nut squash.

Mums are considered one of the most beautiful fall flowers and the city, itself, has planted mums in all its street planters and urns. The colors are striking, highlighting the city's historic sites.

All mums sold at the Farmers' Market are grown at Almquist Flowerland in a field of hardy plants, quite different from so-called "garden mums." The plants are grown just up to the top of Penn's Hill.

Garden mums normally do not survive New England winters, according to an Almquist spokesman, but these hardy mums plants do.

He continued, "As a local business, we pride ourselves on personal service and are committed to service that nurtures long-term relationships that bring us customers for life."

"Visiting the farmers' market and buying locally grown produce, flowers, baked goods, fine skin care products, herbal teas, goat cheese or eggs benefit the local economy," said Anneli Johnson of the Farmers' Market.

The Farmers Market operates Fridays from 11:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the John Hancock Municipal parking lot, off Chestnut Street and near the Fours Restaurant.

24 Municipal Councilors Attend MMA Meeting

Some two dozen city and town councilors from across the state met recently in Quincy for a regional meeting of the Massachusetts Municipal Councilors Association (MMA) at The Tavern at Granite Links, Quincy.

MMA's Deputy Legislative Director John Robertson presented a state legislative update.

The 24 local legislators also heard a presentation on the 2008 Green Communities Act from Scott Durkee, Sustainable Development Coordinator of the state's Department of Energy Resources.

Councilors attending the event were able to share their experiences and discuss the presentations with the speakers.

"This was not only a terrific opportunity to showcase the City of Quincy, but to personally benefit from the collective wisdom of 24 city councilors representing eight Massachusetts communities, all of whom face challenges similar to those we face here in Quincy," said Ward 5 City Councillor Doug Gutro.

Gutro was elected in February to represent District 4 on the MMA Board of Directors.

"The MMA is a tremendously valuable resource to all locally elected officials and a great advocacy organization on behalf of municipalities," said Ward 3 City Councillor Kevin Coughlin who, also, attended the forum.

Coughlin said the MMA offers him great benefits as other councilors share their collective experiences.

"The importance of this is highlighted when cities and towns across the Commonwealth are facing so many difficult challenges to their very existence," Coughlin said.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Fire Prevention Week Oct. 5-11

Fire Prevention week will be held Oct. 5 through Oct. 11. The theme for this year is "Prevent Home Fires." This week was es-tablished to commemorate the Great Chicago Fire, a conflagra-tion that killed more than 250 people in Oct. 1871. The fire began on the 8th while much of the damage was sustained on the 9th, 100,000 were left homeless while the fire de-stroyed more than 17,400 struc-tures.

According to legend, a cow belonging to Mrs. Cath-erine O'Leary kicked over a lamp igniting the contents of her barn. While historians believe the fire started in the vicinity of Mrs.O'Leary's' barn, over time, some be-lieve the cow has taken a bad rap, adding doubt to this legend.

In 1920, President Wood-row Wilson issued the first National Fire Pre-vention Day proclamation, while October 9th, the date of the worst sustained damage from this fire, is always within the dates of obser-vance for his week. Fire Prevention Week is the lon-gest running public health and safety obser-vance on record. (taken from a NFPA Press Release)

The Quincy Fire De-partment will observe the intent of this week by hold-ing an Open House at Fire Head-quarters, 40 Quincy Avenue, between 10 a.. and 2 p.m. on October 4. All are welcome while there will be exhibits and demonstrations of inter-est for both adults and chil-dren. We enthusias-tically encourage all to at-tend while various agencies will be present to answer any questions you or your chil-dren may have.

I've frequently written about our underlying opti-mistic wish that tragedy can't find us. Our frustra-tions as firefighters occurs, where we have witnessed the tragedy of fire, the dev-as-tation, both in lives lost and property loss, and realize that it can. Through edu-cation in general, and through outreach programs such as the upcoming open house, we attempt to bridge the gap between that opti-mistic wish that says it can't happen here, and the real-ity of our experience which conveys that it can, but this is all you have to do to mini-mize its occurrence or the impact if it does.

Therefore, please join us as we observe Fire Preven-tion Week, be part of our efforts to "Prevent Home Fires." Come share in this educational effort while sharing in some lighthearted fire department fun. The fire apparatus will be on dis-play for children. Sparky will make an appearance as well.

We are her to serve you, while this effort is one more attempt at doing so. Please join us in this proactive ef-fort towards a safer commu-nity. We look forward to meeting you, and sharing in this day. See you on the 4th.

Fire Department Open House Oct. 4

The Quincy Fire De-partment, in conjunction with National Fire Preven-tion Week (Oct. 5-11), will be holding an Open House on Saturday, Oct. 4 at the Quincy Fire Headquarters, 40 Quincy Avenue.

The Open House will be held from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. and will include exhib-it booths and fire apparatus demonstrations.

Families, adults and chil-dren are all welcome.

Call the Fire Prevention Bureau at 617-376-1015 for additional information.

Conway Realtors Launches Tax Credit Program For First-Time Homebuyers

Jack Conway Realtors recently launched a one-of-a-kind program targeting first-time homebuyers using the newly-announced $7,500 federal tax credit.

In front of more than 300 managers and associates packed into the Holiday Inn

Rockland, company President Dick Cahill told the crowd Conway is the first company locally to make such a push surrounding the recently signed federal legislation.

"This is going to have a trickle up effect on the market with buyers and sellers," said Cahill. "Customers need to know with mortgage rates dropping, prices at low levels and this new tax credit, it's a great time to buy a home."

The $7,500 tax credit for first-time homebuyers is just a part of the Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008, signed into law by President Bush this summer which provides $300 billion of relief. It's a repayable tax credit, available to first-time buyers who bought between April 9, 2008 and July 1, 2009, and who meet certain income guidelines. It must be paid back over 15 years in equal installments.

Denise Leonard, chairman of the National Association of Mortgage Brokers Government Affairs Committee, was one of the local proponents of the legislation, and she spoke enthusiastically about the tax credit to the Conway crowd.

"This will really help out, and it's a great way to get people into new homes," said Leonard. "The pendulum is swinging back to the side of the buyers, and this is a helpful monetary incentive."

In addition to Leonard's explanation of the legislation's benefits, and Cahill's assessment of it for the marketplace, Conway Financial Services Vice President Rosemary O'Neil announced new initiatives her group has for financing first-time buyers.

"There is mortgage money out there, and there are a variety of ways we can help first-time buyers," said O'Neil.

The company also unveiled a plan for five first-time homebuyers seminars to take place in the next month. The seminars focus on the tax credit, and how it works. They are scheduled for Sept. 24 in Dorchester, Oct. 1 in Brockton, Oct. 7 in Rockland, Oct. 14 in Falmouth and Oct. 16 in Wareham.

All of the seminars start at 6:30 p.m. and are free and open to the public. For more information, and to register, check out www.jackconway.com.

Silent Leak Can Damage Foundation

Q. I have a finished basement in my house that has stayed dry through the years. However, three years ago our town was flooded in heavy rains and so was the basement. It was drained and repaired quickly. Last week, though, I noticed a big "blister" in the paint on one corner of the basement wall. I poked it and water drained out. Do you think the flood damage wasn't totally repaired? — Jaime C., Lowell, Mass.

A. If it's the first water you've seen in three years, then the repair work is not necessarily the culprit. I do think there is a slow leak near and maybe above where you found that blister. Head outside and check the foundation on that side of the basement, nearest the blister. Are there any cracks at the base of the wall or in the foundation? Does water runoff occur in that area? Is there any vegetation growing right up against the foundation?

Water runoff striking the foundation directly will eventually seep through. If there are cracks in the area, it will happen even faster. Vegetation growing right up against the wall can develop deep roots down which water will trickle. Those roots also can slowly cause damage to the foundation, over several years, just as constant water runoff can.

Direct runoff away from the foundation by extending your gutter downspout. Digging a downward-grade trench and filling with gravel will further protect the foundation.

Remove plants that butt up against the wall, and as much root as possible; refill the area with the same material as the rest of the ground surrounding the house (dirt, gravel or concrete). Repair cracks in the wall or foundation, and check periodically in case they redevelop.

The In-Style In-Law Suite

(ARA) - The In-laws. Often, nothing can scare a person more than hearing that they're coming to visit. But as the years go by, and your parents (or your spouse's) get older, visits become more frequent and the thought of sharing a home with them becomes a welcome idea.

Three or more generations live together in 3.9 million American homes, according to the 2000 U.S. Census. A number of households consist of adult children caring for aging parents. But, don't just stick Mom and Dad in the guest room when the time is right for them to move into your home. Having a well-designed in-law suite can make sharing a household much more enjoyable for all parties involved.

"Adding an in-law suite is a great idea, especially for homeowners who want to add extra space to their existing home," says Laurie Birko, marketing and communications manager for Creative Specialties International. "By thinking about the design and amenities aging parents will need, you'll have a universal space that will be safe and accessible not just for them, but for every member of the family."

Keep the following tips in mind when creating an in-law suite that is both appropriate and adjustable to meet your family's needs:

Privacy Please

"Privacy is one of the most important features to consider," Birko says. "A home that provides private spaces for each generation, as well as common gathering spaces, is the best way to make the new living arrangements work." Location is key, but try to keep the in-law suite on the first floor for easy accessibility.

However, creating a suite on another level offers extra seclusion. Also, if possible, provide your in-laws with a separate kitchenette. That way they'll have a sense of independence, but within the comfort and care of your home. A separate entrance is also another addition that can give your in-law suite more autonomy. Just be sure to check local building codes to see if there are any restrictions before you begin the remodel.

Custom-Built Baths

The bathroom is one of the most difficult rooms for older people to maneuver. It has the potential to make your in-law suite full of danger zones if you don't carefully plan. Some aging parents may find the toilet seat is too low to accommodate their limited mobility and puts unnecessary stress on the legs, knees and back. An elevated toilet seat increases comfort and safety levels. Home Care by Moen offers a Locking Elevated Toilet Seat that subtly complements the design of any bathroom, and locks securely on round and elongated toilet rims. Or, if the bath is too far from the bedroom in your in-law suite, Home Care also offers a new Premium Bedside Commode for added safety and comfort - right next to the bed - just in case.

Standing for long periods or slipping in the shower are also concerns in the bathroom for older adults. If you don't want to break the bank installing a built-in seat in the shower, try Home Care's new Premium Shower Chair. It offers superior safety and added conveniences in the shower - all with attractive styling. It has anti-slip rubber feet that provide superior stability, as well as adjustable height settings. The rubber-grip support handles offer added ease and support when standing or sitting, and a basket organizer and handheld shower holder help keep necessary items conveniently close.

To prevent slipping, the new Premium SecureLock

Tub Grip lends a stable helping hand for stepping into and out of the tub. The new design features an easy-locking lever to ensure a tight fit to most tubs without harming the tub surface. An ergonomically designed handle features an anti-slip grip to provide optimal support and comfort. Plus the innovative design offers easy installation and removal - no twisting motion and no tools are necessary.

Versatility is Key

Just because you're planning for this extra space to be a restful haven for your parents, doesn't mean it will always serve that purpose. It's wise to remember that since it may only be used for a limited time, make sure it can flex to other purposes when it's no longer needed as an in-law suite. Be careful to not design a space so specialized that it will impair the future resale value of your home. Perhaps it will become a guest suite, a home office or a master suite, so look for stylish accessories and accents that can help your space transition. But for now, as you're planning for your in-law suite, be sure to keep these tips and products in mind to keep Mom and Dad safe and comfortable.

Beware of Inflated Real Estate Appraisals

If you're trying to refinance your home, once you've finished jumping for joy over a high appraisal, sit back and consider the consequences of taking out a mortgage for the full amount. The same can be said for homebuyers making an offer: When the appraisal is much higher than you expected, you need to be aware.

The dilemma starts with appraisers who are often pushed to inflate the value of homes by lenders who make more money on a higher loan. The pressure on an appraiser can be immense, especially with fewer sales to go around. Add in a cash incentive to cooperate, and you have inflated appraisals. The majority of appraisers are scrupulously honest, but many of them have been run out of business for refusing to inflate values.

The problems with inflated appraisals come into play should you ever want to sell or refinance. Just when you need to pull out cash in a refinance, or to refinance just ahead of a jump in your adjustable-rate mortgage, you could discover that there isn't any equity because you owe more than the home is really worth. Or if you try to sell, you could end up selling for much less than you owe. Worse case, you could lose your home to foreclosure. If you run into a problem down the road because of an inflated appraisal, don't look for much help from the authorities. Because of federal regulations, some states have mechanisms in place to go after appraisers who routinely inflate the value of homes, but for the most part you'll get no satisfaction and no money back.

Things to watch for:

- If the lender promises a high appraisal, beware.

- If the appraiser works for the lender, double beware.

- If you're told you're in luck, that the appraiser has a break in his schedule and can be at your house in an hour, decline that appointment. Before the appraiser arrives at your house, do an online search for both the appraiser and the appraiser's company. Look for any warnings or complaints.

Check online sources to try to determine the real value of your home or the one you hope to buy. Realtor.com is one of the best, but also check the sites of agents in your area.

David Uffington regrets that he cannot personally answer reader questions, but will incorporate them into his column whenever possible. Write to him in care of King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475, or send e-mail to columnduply@gmail.com.

Five Home-Buying Myths

(ARA) - As first-time homebuyers grow curious about the home-buying process, they often turn to friends and family for advice about purchasing a home. While these sources can provide useful tips and information, they also may perpetuate some common home-buying myths.

"While family and friends may have the best intentions when sharing their purchase experiences, it is important to make sure that first-time homebuyers have accurate information," says Brian Lee, vice president and national sales manager for ditch, a wholly-owned subsidiary of GMAC Financial Services.

There are many resources first-time buyers can use for learning about the home-financing process, including attending local mortgage seminars or researching online. Well-known mortgage lenders such as ditch often have educational resources and mortgage tools on their Web sites.

Here are some common home-buying myths:

Myth 1: You need perfect credit.

An individual's credit score will significantly affect his or her mortgage loan approval and interest rate. Credit scores may range from 500 to 850, but the majority of scores are between 600 and 700. The higher the score, the more options you will have when looking for a mortgage. Along with your credit score, lenders will need to consider other factors before they approve a loan. Carefully review your credit report and immediately contact the credit reporting bureaus to correct any errors. You will want your credit report to be accurate by the time you apply for a mortgage.

Myth 2: Owning a home is more expensive than renting.

In many markets, owning can be as affordable as renting, especially when you consider the tax advantages of owning a home. Unlike rental costs, which increase over time, fixed-rate mortgages provide consistent monthly principal and interest payments for the life of the loan. As you make payments, the money will be applied toward the principal, increasing the equity in your home over time. Historically, owning a home has been one of the easiest ways of building wealth in America as home prices generally increase over time.

Myth 3: Lenders share your personal information.

Your personal information is protected by federal and state privacy laws. Generally, lenders must get your permission to share personal financial information with non-affiliates.

Myth 4: The mortgage process is too long and complicated.

With the right resources, the process of buying a home and obtaining a mortgage can be simplified. Expect an experienced loan officer to review the home financing process with you, define terms, and address concerns to find the financing option that's right for you. In addition, home lenders such as ditch (www.ditch.com) offer a number of online resources such as payment calculators, appraisal tools and a glossary of commonly-used mortgage terms to simplify the home-buying process.

Myth 5: Lenders love to make you wait.

Mortgage lenders don't enjoy making you wait, but it does take time to review your application. Although some lenders may give you a preliminary and conditional pre-approval based on the information provided in an application, they will need to verify this information. This typically involves confirming employment and income, financial assets, and assessing the value of the home you're purchasing. Other documents, such as a payoff statement, may have to be ordered as well. Because lenders must rely on the response time of third parties, the process may take longer than anticipated. Ask your lender about what to expect when you submit an application and to keep you informed of unexpected delays.

Setting an Example

Q. After years of inactivity, I now exercise five days a week, eat clean and consider myself to have a healthy lifestyle. My very good friend visits me before and after my workouts, but will not join me. She is overweight, does not exercise and eats poorly, and I am concerned about her health. How can I encourage her to begin to exercise and care about her health?

A. Living a healthy lifestyle is easier for some people than for others, and it can be challenging to have people in your life who do not share your lifestyle. The key is to continue to be a good example of living healthy while finding ways to be subtle and encourage your friend to adopt new habits.

As you may have found out with your friend, you have to allow for people to change when they are ready. Encourage your friend without becoming too pushy. Share your stories of when you first began to exercise and how it took time for you to adapt to a lifestyle of exercise and eating well. Share recipes your friend would enjoy that are more healthful than what she may be eating. Just because your friend has not yet decided to embrace your healthy lifestyle does not mean she has not noticed the benefits you have received from your commitment.

Continue to invite your friend to exercise when you're doing a workout that she can do successfully. Walking around the block while discussing the news of the day can be a way to exercise while visiting with each other. Begin with a short walk that your friend can complete, and then gradually increase the time or distance.

Another way to start the process could be finding a fun race/walk for a charity that you and your friend can sign up for together and plan a training schedule. Many cities have 5k race/walk events to raise money. Find a cause that is important to you and your friend and begin to train for the race. Most races are noncompetitive and offer a light and motivating environment with novice and experienced participants racing together. This can be a great way to get your friend moving for a cause and directing her focus beyond her personal fitness status.

Use your personal experience to find creative ways to encourage your friend to exercise and eat well. Remember what factors played a role in your moving from being inactive to active, and incorporate those instances to help your friend. Share stories of your experiences and little tips to make her journey easier and realistic.

We would like for all of our family and friends to live a healthy and happy lifestyle. Just as you made a choice to make this a priority in your life, your friend will also have to personally make this choice. Continue to live a positive lifestyle and be a great example to your friend until she is ready to make a change. In the meantime, keep moving.

Always consult a physician before beginning an exercise program.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING?

While there is little debate that fluoride significantly improves the ability of teeth to resist decay, there is the possibility of getting too much of a good thing. In fact, when children get too much fluoride, it can give rise to a condition known as fluorosis with its characteristic white, blotchy tooth stains. Fluorosis can occur from getting too much fluoride from drinking water, prescription vitamins, and toothpaste. Generally speaking, if the fluoride level in drinking water is one part per million, children should not be getting additional fluoride from other sources. With this in mind, parents may want to call the local water company and ask what the fluoride level is, then discuss the information with their dentists.

Project Bread's Plan For Better School Meals

As school systems cope with higher costs for food and fuel, Project Bread, Massachusetts' leading anti-hunger organization, provides a new Better Lunch Toolkit for food service directors.

The Better Lunch Toolkit ensures school meals are leaner, leafier, and more colorfully nutritious.

Through Better Lunch, developed in cooperation with the Harvard School of Public Health and the School of Nutrition at Tufts University, Project Bread gives helpful guidelines to combat childhood obesity and nourish hungry children. Project Bread's Better Meals Initiative — with the already-established Better Breakfast Toolkit, as well as Better Lunch and Marketing Healthy Foods Toolkits — is intended to guide food service directors in their menu planning and product ordering, as well as give them strategies to help kids embrace the change.

"People ask if the schools can afford to serve healthier food," says Ellen Parker, the executive director of Project Bread. "We believe they can't afford not to. With childhood obesity and type II diabetes on the rise, all of us will pay the price for a low-income child's medical care down the line. Beyond the dollars and cents argument, we have a moral obligation to ensure that all children get a fair chance at a healthy and successful life."

When schools invest in the healthy food they serve their students, the results can show up in improved academic performance, more attentive classroom behavior, and better lifelong health habits. Says Parker: "With our new lunch toolkit we've worked out the most nutritious, appealing, and kid-friendly meals possible. We've made an investment in sourcing all the products and vendors for both breakfast and lunch so that a busy food service director can work within a tight budget. The Marketing Healthy Foods Toolkit will help them take the lead in making his or her school food a model of good eating."

"The chefs and food service directors who have helped us are professionals who are passionate about feeding kids well," continued Parker. "With these toolkits and our growing investment in locally grown produce, we can bring the snap and crunch of fresh apples and other produce into the cafeteria while helping food service directors stay within budget."

Schools are beginning to pay attention. The Better Breakfast Initiative, which began four years ago with three programs in Lawrence and Southbridge, now boasts 22 low-income schools in seven cities and towns. Three Boston public schools are now part of a pilot program in which Chef Kirk Conrad has forsaken frying for heart-healthy meals appealing to kids. Chef Conrad educates cafeteria managers about healthier ways to prepare foods such as adding fresh herbs instead of relying on heavy sauces. And throughout the Framingham school district, under the direction of food service director and chef Brendan Ryan, Project Bread guidelines for Better Breakfast and Lunch mean students eat more fresh fruit, whole grains, leaner cuts of meat, and low-fat dairy products.

Project Bread believes school meals are fundamental to good nutrition because schools provide the bulk of calories consumed by children and teenagers whose families struggle to put food on the table at home. Food service directors have a unique opportunity to create access to nutritious foods and help students develop healthy eating habits at a young age.

"We work closely with food service directors," said Elaine Taber, director of Education Policy at Project Bread. "We listen and tweak. We understand that shifting from high fat macaroni and cheese to turkey wraps can take a little internal marketing, but that kids will accept and even become champions of the change. We also understand the economics of school food and therefore have included cost cutting strategies in our new lunch toolkit. We know that improving nutrition can happen even in today's economy, and we're here to help schools make the shift."

About Project Bread

As the state's leading anti-hunger organization, Project Bread has taken the lead in advocating for nutritionally enhanced school meals for low-income children as part of its mission to alleviate, prevent, and ultimately end hunger in Massachusetts.

Don't Let Election Stress Get The Best Of You

(ARA) - This presidential election seems like it has lasted an eternity, and to many people in the United States, it is a critical one. This has both good and bad consequences.

On the one hand, interest and participation is at an all time high, as citizens take seriously the responsibilities that accompany the right to vote. On the other hand, intense candidate scrutiny has passions running very high and straining relationships as people press for their candidate. In addition, many people are finding this election cycle very stressful as their emotions rise and fall depending on the daily polls and news coverage. Dr. Patrice Alvarado, associate professor in clinical psychology at the Argosy University, Washington, D.C. campus, offers a few tips to help people manage their passion, but let go of the stress.

Dr. Alvarado recommends:

* Get active.

If you find yourself watching election coverage hourly and worrying and ruminating about how things are going, get active on behalf of your party or candidate. Instead of just worrying, go down to your local county or precinct office and sign up to help canvass or register voters. Make calls from home based on lists sent to you electronically. There are many other things to do including buy a bumper sticker or a yard sign, attend a rally or donate money to a candidate's campaign. Becoming active and working with others on behalf of a candidate will help combat helplessness and promote a feeling of empowerment.

* Get perspective.

When it comes to your important relationships with others, realize that party affiliation or candidate preference is a very minor part of who a person is. Do not let political preferences act as a wedge between loved ones, co-workers, life-long friends, church members and neighbors. Keep in perspective the many areas of understanding, commonality and connection between you and those close to you and minimize the differences that are based on political preferences.

* Don't talk politics at work.

Since politics, like religion is often very tied with our emotions, it is best to avoid political arguments with co-workers. Discussing politics in groups where there are significant differences is one more way to become divided from each other. It is often easier to realize ways we are divided, but the struggle of finding common ground is well worth the effort because it results in a positive workplace environment. Look for one or two like-minded coworkers to talk with individually at lunch, break time or on the weekend to talk about politics. A general rule of practice is to avoid controversial topics with larger groups.

* Be compassionate to yourself.

Be kind to yourself and turn off the television before the point of election campaign overload.

"For some, it may be best to realize that this time is and will be stressful and to simply accept this as a product of caring deeply about our country and our world," Dr. Alvarado said. "Lastly, remember it will all be over in November."

Defense, Offense Improved

High Hopes For Woodward Soccer

By SEAN BRENNAN

The Woodward School for Girls' varsity soccer program is set on achieving big things this year in the Independent Girls Conference (IGC).

Last season Woodward finished in fifth place, just three points out of second place. The team finished the 2007 season with a school record six ties, giving hope to head coach Bob Giordano that this season those ties will turn into wins.

"The biggest thing we have going for us this season is that we have the game experience and the talent to turn some of those ties into wins," said Giordano. "This year's team is well-balanced both on the offensive side and defensive side of the field."

"Unlike last year when we had a good team with good players, this year's team is made up of more pure soccer players. We here at Woodward have a smaller number of players to choose from, so we do have some young players on the team, but we also have a strong senior class that should help with the leadership aspect and provide a strong base as we move forward this fall."

Giordano will be looking to senior captains Jamie Riley, Tatianna Rosado and Lexi Carr, as well as junior captain Sarah Bender, to control the field.

Riley, of Quincy, expects her team to be much improved this year based mainly on the experience she and her teammates gained the last few years playing at Woodward.

"It is important that the upperclassman take the reins and lead by example," Riley said. "We have two lower schools students playing this year, and they will be productive, but it really is going to be the upperclassman that will need to step up."

Fellow captain Tatianna Rosado expressed similar sentiments about the need for the senior class to play with composure and to utilize their talents.

"We are looking for wins and not ties this season. With many new faces on both offense and defense it is going to be important for us captains and the other older players to lead by example and help out any way we can. It should be an exciting season."

For Giordano, this season has the chance to be something very special. He sees improvements on both defense and offense and likes what he has seen so far from his team.

"We opened the season with an impressive 2-1 victory over CSW and that score really didn't tell the whole story. We had plenty of scoring chances and just couldn't add on to the two goals we did score, but it was a well-played game and gave me insight on what I can expect as the season moves forward.

"It should be a successful campaign."

Besides Riley, Rosado, DeCarr and Bender, the rest of the roster consists of senior Malika Weekes, sophomores Aoife Leonard, Anaise Trocher, Emma Douglas, Stephanie MacIsaac, Phoebe Walsh, Maggie Will and Kristin Bimmiller, freshman May Perriello, Lillian Plourde and Brittany McCulloch, eighth graders Jackie Eleey and Danielle Paschall and seventh grader

Ava Small.

The coaching staff includes Erin Massa and Allie Roderique and the team manager is senior Joelle Tobin.

The Woodward School for Girls is scheduled to play next on Oct. 2 against B & M and again on Oct. 3 versus Warning Academy.

Quincy Babe Ruth Update, Open Meeting Oct. 2

Quincy Youth Baseball

13-15 Babe Ruth Tryout Schedule

Mark Jaehnig, newly elected president of the Quincy Youth Baseball 13-15 year old Babe Ruth, announces interested parties from both sides of the current "Babe Ruth controversy" have been meeting with hopes of re-uniting the two leagues.

According to Jaehnig, people from both sides, and more importantly most of the players and parents, agree that the best thing for the kids in Quincy is to have one unified baseball league. Based on discussion at the first meeting, both groups agreed that changes must be made to the current Quincy Babe Ruth program in the best interest of our 13-15 year old baseball players.

fessional baseball tryout. Players in attendance will be tested for footspeed (60 yard dash), arm strength, hitting in the batting cage, live hitting, fielding, pitching and catching (if player wishes to try out for catcher or pitcher). Teams will not be selected until the spring since both sides have expressed the desire to merge into one league.

All 13-15 year old players are invited to participate, regardless of their registration status and regardless if they are new or returning players.

Presidents, Red Raiders Earn First Victories

The Quincy Presidents and the North Quincy Red Raiders both got in the win column this past weekend with shutout victories over Plymouth South HS and Sharon HS, respectively.

Quincy (1-2 overall) took care of Plymouth South 13-0 behind some stingy defensive work and two long touchdown passes from quarterback Lance Peterson to wide receiver Anthony Raddatz.

The Peterson-Raddatz combination struck first in the second quarter with a 20-yard scoring strike that gave the Presidents a 7-0 half-time advantage. This combo put Quincy up 13-0 in the third quarter when Peterson found Raddatz open in the end zone for a 27-yard touchdown pass.

Kicker Max Devoe was 1-for-2 on point after attempts.

The first victory of the season for Quincy also marked first-year head coach Bill Reardon's first win as head ball coach at QHS.

North Quincy (1-1 overall) rebounded from a 24-0 loss at the hands of Scituate HS in the season-opener with a resounding 28-0 thrashing of Sharon HS last Saturday.

Running back Brian Donaghey scored on a 13-yard touchdown run in the first quarter, a score that would hold up until the second half.

In the third quarter, NQ's Pat Watkins scored on a 48-yard TD run and Joe Vailpando added to that score with a late quarter 22-yard TD run. At the end of three quarters, the score was 21-0 North Quincy.

Terrance Staley capped off the scoring with a fourth quarter 9-yard TD run.

Shea Olesseyi was successful on all four of his PAT attempts.

Quincy will now have two weeks to get ready for Patriot League foe Rockland HS (Oct. 3) and North Quincy will play on the road Friday night versus Plymouth South.

A Job Well Done

On Sunday, Sept. 14, at approximately 8:50 a.m. Officer Ryan Donnelly was dispatched by communications along with Officer William Lanergan to Sacred Heart Church for a call of an unwanted male in the church. The caller said that the male was disturbing the mass by dancing in the aisle and sitting on the altar.

LT. DAN MINTON

Upon Officer Donnelly's arrival, he met with two parishioners on the steps who confirmed the male's actions and that their attempts to convince the male to leave were unsuccessful. Officer Donnelly walked into the church and found the pre-described male sitting on the altar in a chair. Approximately 40 parishioners were seated waiting, while the priest and his entourage were at the back of the church waiting to reclaim the altar.

Officer Donnelly started to walk down the aisle and as he neared the altar, the male suspect stood up and started to walk towards the side door. Officer Donnelly instructed the suspect to stop. Instead of stopping, the suspect walked at the officer. The suspect was asked why he was on the altar and he responded, "worshipping."

Officer Donnelly, believing the suspect to be drugs, told the suspect the staff at the church wanted him to leave. The suspect said, "Why do I have to leave, and I am not leaving." The officer advised the suspect to go outside with him and talk about the situation. Since the suspect did not budge, Officer Donnelly attempted to escort him out of the church and this was when the suspect pulled away and began swinging his arms.

The officer was able to grab hold of the suspect's arm briefly, but then the suspect broke loose and struck the officer in the chest area. Officer Donnelly ordered the suspect to stop and turn around. The suspect retorted, "F--- you and I'm not turning around."

When the suspect failed to obey the order, the officer drew his pepper spray and ordered him once again to turn around. The suspect then repositioned into a fighting stance and said, "What do you think - I've never been sprayed before." He then took a step forward toward the officer and was subsequently sprayed with a one second burst of pepper spray. The spray caused the suspect to become disoriented and Officer Donnelly took the opportunity to try handcuffing the suspect.

Officer Lanergan arrived and assisted in getting the uncooperative suspect out of the church and into the cruiser. Due to his violent nature, the suspect was transported to the station via the police wagon.

Officer Donnelly then interviewed witnesses who said the suspect initially walked down the aisle, then began to sing and dance, ending up at the altar. The mass was held up due to the bizarre behavior of the suspect.

The suspect, a Quincy resident, was charged with disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and assault and battery on a police officer. A check on his criminal record showed he had numerous incidents of assaulting police officers.

It was unfortunate that such an incident would occur in a church but the suspect gave the officer no choice.

Nice work!

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) The changing season brings new experiences as well as challenges for the ever-adventurous Aries. Your social life expands, as do the opportunities at your workplace.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) That recent period of uncertainty has passed. You can now feel more confident about making decisions, especially those that relate to an important personal relationship.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Although you might be faced with a number of tasks on your to-do list, try to take time out to enjoy the arts. Music, especially, can be soothing to the sensitive soul of a Gemini.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A disagreement with a colleague or friend is best resolved with open and frank discussion. Trying to force the other party to see things your way is bound to backfire.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) That Leonine pride might be ruffled by a colleague's challenge to one of your pet ideas. But stop growing and listen. You could learn something that will work to your advantage.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) Someone in authority might decide to select you as a candidate for a project that carries more responsibilities. Be prepared to show why you're the right choice for the job.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) That new workplace problem should be dealt with as soon as possible. Leaving it unresolved for too long could lead to an even more unsettling and time-consuming situation.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) You might have to do some fancy juggling to keep both your work responsibilities and personal obligations on track. But ultimately, you'll work it all out, as you always do.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) You might hear some upsetting things about a situation in your life. But don't be swayed by talk. Demand proof before making any decisions on the matter.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Don't risk depleting those precious energy levels by taking on more tasks than you can realistically handle. Also, remember to ask for help when you need it.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) It might be difficult for the Aquarian who is used to giving advice to take counsel when offered. But it's a good idea to listen to what trusted friends feel you should know.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Things might be a little unsettled as you move through a period of reassessment. But once you get your priorities sorted out, you should be ready to tackle an important decision.

BORN THIS WEEK: You're able to achieve a happy balance in your productive life by never feeling overwhelmed or underappreciated.

Blessing Of Animals Oct. 5 At Quincy Point Congregational

A Blessing of the Animals will be on St. Francis Sunday, Oct. 5 outside Quincy Point Congregational Church at 11:15 a.m.

All are welcome to bring pets (or a photo) for this special event. Leases or pet carriers are encouraged.

The simple ceremony will include a song, prayer of St. Francis and individual blessing.

"The ceremony of blessing pets is held in the spirit of St. Francis. Francis encouraged everyone to regard the whole of God's creation with respect and care," said the Rev. Ann Suzedell, pastor of Quincy Point Congregational Church.

"As stewards of God's creation, Francis saw our role more as 'caretakers' than landlords. Those who speak up for our responsibility toward God's creation, challenging the over-use and abuse of our environmental resources, can claim Francis as a spiritual ancestor as well."

The idea for the blessing ceremony outside Quincy Point Congregational Church was inspired by a request from some of the QPCC Sunday School students who are raising money for a Heifer Project "Ark of Animals."

On Sunday, Sept. 28, the church will celebrate a 10 a.m. service. Rev. Suzedell will deliver the sermon "Grumbling Around the Grapevine."

Chris Mendez will serve as Deacon of the Day.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Modern funeral service today performs, by design, many of the functions that primitive man performed by instinct.

The funeral with the body present impresses the reality of the situation upon the minds and emotions of the bereaved. Constant and continuing experience indicates that the vast majority of people want and need this confirmation.

Among all men and in all time, custom has devised a meeting place between the living and the dead. This is more than a show of sympathy for the bereaved family. It is more than a parting from someone well loved and well regarded. It is a way of saying that the sorrows of one are the sorrows of all. Today this meeting place is usually a funeral home—where none are formally invited, but all are welcome to come...

Squantum Seaside Gardeners

Daylily Planting Project Saturday

The Seaside Gardeners of Squantum will hold the 10th anniversary of the Daylily Planting Project of the Squantum Causeway at noon, Saturday, Sept. 27 at Nickerson Legion Post, Squantum.

The planting portion of this project began on May 30, 1998 when over 200 people participated in the daylong event and planted 5000 daylilies.

Prior to the planting, Sally Erickson had raised concerns to club members about the neglected Squantum Causeway in 1996. The Seaside Gardeners membership agreed to seek approval from city officials for the beautification project.

The process took two years and included meetings with then Mayor James Sheets and City Councilor Bruce Ayers as well as appearances and meetings before the Quincy Conservation Commission, the DPW and the MDC. Included in the planning and design of the project were representatives of Marina Bay Associates and landscape designer Mary Smith.

At the time, there were only 15 active members of the club so many additional helping hands were need for the thousands of plantings. Thanks to help through radio, television and newspaper publicity as well as direct mail and personal flyer drops, over 200 people volunteered for the planting event.

Seaside Gardeners no longer have the assistance of all 200 "Friends of the Squantum Causeway" but the lilies still bloom in abundance, thanks to volunteers from the Norfolk Country Sheriff's office.

These volunteers maintain the Causeway twice a year with bed cleaning and preparing for the summer and winter seasons.

All volunteers are invited to attend the celebration, including those who have been continuing the effort.

A love note to Joanne

We are so glad God gave us a treasure

With a sister like you.

In all the world we shall not find

A heart so wonderfully kind.

Nobody ever knew how to put caring

Into action the way that you did.

Upright and just in all your ways

Loyal and true through all your days.

A generous hand, and an active mind

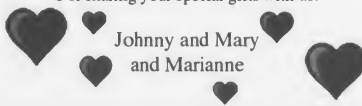

Anxious to please with so sweet a smile.

Lovingly missed and remembered everyday

With love, and a world of thanks

For sharing your special gifts with us.

Council Votes $1M For Broad Meadows Restoration Project

"He has literally given a lifetime to ecological projects like this and he has been a relentless supporter of this project."

Walker said Kelly checked on the Broad Meadows project at the mayor's office almost every week. He also cited Congressman William Delahunt's as a "tireless advocate for this project in Washington."

Fatseas introduced the issue Monday, outlining the efforts by Koch and his two predecessors, Mayor William Phelan and Mayor James Sheets.

The council approved $1,025,207 with appropriation from the following accounts, $450,207 from the Westlands Restoration, $75,000 from the Quarry Hills Oversight and $500,000 from the Stabilization Fund.

In 2006, then Mayor Phelan called the Broad Meadows Restoration "one of the most exciting projects in our city's history."

He described the area as a 100-acre phragmite-infested, mosquito breeding wasteland behind the Broad Meadows Middle School and Quincy Youth Arena.

well as substantial savings to employees.

Councillor Joseph Finn cast the lone vote opposing the move, stating that he did not intend to influence employee votes and that the council could meet before next Wednesday if the unions approved the G.I.C.

"I don't want to be in the position of having to vote in the affirmative or negative until they (union members) have their opportunity," Finn said.

If a majority of employees approves the move to the state plan, city employees will be covered by the G.I.C. for a minimum of three years beginning July 1st.

If not, the city must wait another year for a vote.

In order for Quincy to join the G.I.C., 70 percent of the city's employees must approve the decision. As the largest union, the teachers are a pivotal vote.

The city can't join without their approval as they account for 39 percent.

Steven Monahan who represents the city 2500 retirees and 10 percent of the employee vote told councillors Monday that he will vote to join the G.I.C.

"This is a win-win situation," said Monahan who noted that retirees' spouses and dependents are guaranteed coverage under the G.I.C.

"We've had some knock down, drag out fights," Monahan said of the more than dozen citywide meetings on the issue. "It hasn't been easy."

In addition, Carol Block who heads the supervisors union (S.E.I.U.) said her membership, also, approves the G.I.C. with a 1.02 percent impact.

Other union leaders who spoke Monday criticized the rushed timing of the G.I.C. decision-making again this year and the fact that the city still has not agreed to a P.E.C., a official employees' committee representing and bargaining health issues for all city employees.

"One of the biggest negatives is our collective bargaining (rights) will be taken away," Ernie Arienti, President of the firefighters' union told council members, as did Joe McArdle, president of the parks department employees union.

"We're giving up our right to collective bargaining," Said McArdle.

Lt. Tim Sorgi who heads the police Superior Officers Union told councillors that the city shouldn't be trying for 70 percent approval, "the city's goal should be to get as close to 100 percent (as possible)."

"I don't think we're there yet," said McArdle.

"We wanted to have a P.E.C. in place," McArdle said, echoing a criticism by other union leaders, including Dominic Venturelli, president of the Quincy Public Employees Association.

Venturelli applauded city leaders for their efforts but said, "I think the PEC should be formed first."

City, Unions Reach Agreement

Koch Sees $4-5M Savings In Health Care Insurance Pact

By LAURA GRIFFIN

It might have been Black Tuesday for the rest of the country but not for Mayor Thomas Koch as Quincy became the largest city in the Commonwealth to join the state's health insurance program, known as the G.I.C.

Koch cited a $4 to $5 million financial savings for the city Tuesday as he and 14 labor leaders formally signed three agreements binding the city and its 4626 employees and retirees to the state's health insurance program.

"With the rest of the world crumbling around us, this is a happy financial day for us," Koch said after the signing ceremony in the mayor's City Hall office.

Joining the state insurance plan was especially opportune this year, said Koch, adding that the financial "notices we're getting from the state are not pretty."

Koch credited a cooperative effort between city officials and union leaders who held more than 20 meetings in the past months.

"This is a landmark agreement, and it shows what happens when we all get in a room, roll up our sleeves, and work toward common ground," said Koch.

"Everyone is fully aware of the tough times looming ahead, and this will be a huge boost for our employees and our taxpayers."

According to Koch, the state plan will not only save funds for the city but employees could save as much as $4 million in premiums.

At this time, the city is paying some $42 million in health insurance costs for employees and retirees.

At the formal signing Tuesday, Koch and 15 union leaders signed three documents:

- ◆ An agreement to join the state plan
- ◆ An agreement to officially form a Public Employees Committee or P.E.C., a bargaining unit representing all city employees and retirees
- ◆ An agreement for a $300 annual salary increase for employees (Retirees will receive an 8 percent increase in Medicare payments over several years.)

Under the plan, Quincy's employees will join the 274,000 state and city employees and retirees, already enrolled in the G.I.C. or Group Insurance Commission.

According to G.I.C. proponents, it is those numbers in the hundreds of thousands that give the G.I.C. clout in negotiating premiums and payments for its membership and keep costs down for the state and cities and towns.

City councillors approved the state insurance program at their Sept. 22 meeting and 14 unions subsequently voted yes with the Quincy Educators' Association voting yes first on Sept. 24.

Also approving the measure were unions representing Library, City Hall Supervisors, the firefighters, Quincy Public Safety (Fire Alarm), school custodians.

Christopher Tufo Sworn In As Quincy District Court Officer

Some 40 persons applauded last week as Judge Robert Mulligan administered the official oath to new court officer Christopher Tufo, 21, at Quincy District Court.

Tufo will fill the court position held by his late father Anthony "Tony" Tufo who died July 3 after a boating accident in Boston Harbor.

Tony Tufo, 60, was a beloved court office at Quincy Court where he was known as a dedicated public employee, according to judges and officers at the court.

Court officers attend court sessions, announce witnesses, administer the oath of office, maintain records of proceedings, police and protect the courthouse, and escort and oversee prisoners in confinement.

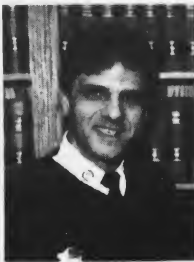

At the time of Tufo's death, First Justice Mark S. Coven called him "one of the hardest working employees of the court" while Court Magistrate Arthur Tobin said Tufo was "the most beloved individual in Quincy Court."

Speakers at the ceremony said that they expect Christopher Tufo will fill his father's shoes.

Among those attending the ceremony were Judge Coven, Judge Lynda Connolly, Chief Justice of District Courts, and Judge Paul Dawley, Regional 3 Justice.

After Judge Mulligan administered the oath of office, Christopher's mother, Liz Tufo pinned the official clerk's badge on her son.

Liz Tufo, an attorney, is the daughter of former Atty. General and Lt. Gov. Frank Bellotti and his wife, Maggie, and the sister of Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti, and Chief Court Officer Patti Bellotti, all of whom attended the ceremony.

A tribute to the Court Officer Tufo will be held Friday, Oct. 24 6 to 11 p.m. at I.B.E.W. Local 103, 256 Freeport St., Dorchester.

Checks for the $25 donation for the event may be made payable to "Friends of Tony Tufo. For more information, call Patti Bellotti, 617-908-3444, Jean-Marie Galvin, 617-513-2706 or Kathy Healy, 617-872-9841.

'Our Countries Are Partners And Friends'

Albanian President Welcomed To City

By LAURA GRIFFIN

State and city officials joined the Albanian community Saturday when they offered a warm welcome to Albanian President Bamir Topi as he visited Alba's Restaurant, Quincy Center.

Mayor Thomas Koch said it was an honor for the "City of Presidents having a president drop by" and he was especially happy for Alba's owner Leo Keka, "a proud Albanian who runs a good restaurant here."

While Topi's visit to the United States centered on observing and celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Albanian Orthodox Church, the Albanian community had even more reasons to celebrate.

Topi used his Quincy visit for the historic announcement that Albania had been accepted as a full member of NATO, the North American Treaty Organization.

"As we speak, the United States has signed all the paperwork to make Albania a full member of NATO," Topi said after describing the great debt his country owes the United States.

Membership in NATO is expected to stimulate the Albanian economy by encouraging more foreign investment and modernization, according to the Financial Times.

"Our countries are partners and friends," Topi said, then referred to the "important role the United States (has had) in the history of Albania."

Albanians could "start and end the day thanking America," Topi said, adding "That would be a good way...."

"We are going to strengthen our friendship and keep it alive," said Topi who described his visit to Iraq last December.

In Baghdad, Topi said "I saw with my own eyes, (Albanian soldiers) equal peers with American soldiers. We have the same way of looking at the world."

Topi addressed Alba's diners and local officials and dignitaries in the Albanian language immediately translated by Albanian Ambassador Stephan Koqi. The Albanian language is used solely by Albanians.

On hand to welcome Topi were Koch, Sen. Michael Morrissey, Sen. Robert Hedlund of Weymouth, Rep. Ron Mariano and former Mayor James Sheets.

The 51-year-old Topi was elected President of Albania in 2007 and has pledged to bring full democracy to the roughly 3.6 million citizens of his tiny country in Southeastern Europe.

The country of 11,000 square miles is bordered by Greece, Montenegro, Kosovo and the Republic of Macedonia with coastlines on the Adriatic Sea and Ionian Sea.

After his formal speech, Topi and other Albanian officials conducted a private conference on the second floor of the restaurant before rejoining the diners and mingling with some 200 persons over the course of his three-hour visit.

Before him was a feast featuring Alba's specialties and a large layer cake created by Montillio's with frosting depicting the Albanian flag, a red flag with a black two-headed eagle in the center, representing the country's battle for freedom from the Ottoman empire.

• On Oct. 10, 1845, the United States Naval Academy opens in Annapolis, Md., as the Naval School. The school officially became the U.S. Naval Academy in 1850, when a new curriculum went into effect, requiring midshipmen to study at the academy for four years and to train aboard ships each summer.

• On Oct. 6, 1866, the Reno gang carries out the first robbery of a moving train in the U.S., taking more than $10,000 from an Ohio & Mississippi train in Jackson County, Ind. Previously, holdups had taken place only on trains sitting at stations or freight yards.

• On Oct. 7, 1913, for the first time, Henry Ford's entire Highland Park, Mich., automobile factory is run on a moving assembly line, cutting the man-hours required to complete one "Model T" from 12 1/2 hours to six. Within a year, further improvements slashed the time to 93 man-minutes.

His Mission Accomplished

Mission Accomplished.

Frank McCauley has reached his 20,000-mile walking goal. And still walking on.

It took him; he says, 11 years, eight months and 16 days to do it. (He's so meticulous; we thought he would have it right down to the exact minute and second.)

Anyway, he reached that milestone Sept. 16 when he completed a two-mile walk from his Manet Avenue, Houghs Neck home around Post Island Road and back.

McCauley didn't start keeping track of his mileage until Jan. 1, 1997.

But he started his walking in 1973, which means he has actually walked more than those 20,000 miles.

He has averaged four to five 16-minute miles a day and has done some distances walking for charity. Including the Jimmy Fund Walk over the tough Boston Marathon 26.2-mile course, raising $34,000 to help fight cancer in children.

Those official 20,000 miles are something like walking from Quincy to the North Pole or to California seven times.

McCauley is giving some thought to taking on a new challenge: 25,000 miles, equivalent, he says, to walking around the Earth at the Equator.

"I'm not sure I'll try it," he says. "I think I could reach 25,000 miles in two and a half years, depending on my health and the plans of the Good Lord."

McCauley, who turns 79 in December, says walking has spared him knee and hip surgery and other ailments many seniors face.

He recommends you give it a whirl.

INCIDENTALLY, if you like Quincy political history, McCauley has it. And interesting trivia, too.

His book "A Political History of Quincy" published

FRANK MCCAULEY proudly displays a sign announcing the completion of his 20,000-mile walking goal, which he started Jan. 1, 1997.

in 2000 accurately covers 111 years from 1889 when Quincy became a city to Mayor James Sheets' sixth term inaugural in January 2000. Sprinkled with interesting nuggets. Like, did you know:

John Quinn was the longest serving city councillor with 24 years.

Jim Sheets served the longest as a ward councillor representing Ward 4 for 16 years.

And Sheets went on to hold another record: 12 years (six terms) as mayor under Plan A.

Amelio Della Chiesa served 12 years as mayor, eight under Plan A and four under Plan E. (Under Plan E a city manager ran the city and the mayor was the ceremonial head and actually a city councillor.)

DELLA CHIESA

HAROLD

Paul Harold was the top vote getter for councillor at-large in 1977 with 21,243. George Burke was second with 20,741 and Arthur Tobin third in 1975 with 20,453.

Tobin was the longest serving city council president with eight years from 1970 to 1977. Council rules now limit the president to two one-year terms.

James McIntyre polled the highest number of votes for mayor with 22,034 in 1965. Della Chiesa holds the runner-up spot with 20,131 in 1961.

And McCauley is the only person in the city's history to be elected to all four municipal offices: Ward councillor, councillor at-large, school committee and mayor.

There's a lot more tidbits where they came from.

MCINTYRE

READY FOR ANOTHER pet peeve? How about motorists who speed through red lights in front of the Hancock Cemetery trying to catch the light at Granite Street while it is still green. (Be careful stepping off the sidewalk.)

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1920's postcard view of Quincy Square showing the old Bethany Congregational Church on the site of today's Bank of America building. The tree would be in the doorway of Rogers Jewelry store. Trolley tracks ran down what is now Christmas Island in the middle of Hancock Street. On the right the peaked roof was the top of the Greenleaf Hotel. The roof was destroyed by fire and never replaced. The three-story Greenleaf building remains there today. Also on the right is the barely discernible marquee of the Alhambra Theater. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

An Open Letter From Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc.

In the interest of assisting players and their families understand the status of Babe Ruth Baseball in the City of Quincy, I am writing this letter.

Effective Feb. 3, 2009 Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc. (QBRL) will be the only organization in the City of Quincy that will be a holder of a charter from Babe Ruth League, Inc. As of Feb. 3, 2009 no other organization in Quincy will be chartered or recognized by Babe Ruth League, Inc. as a chartered Babe Ruth baseball league.

In a letter dated Aug. 25, 2008 from Mark Matanes, State Commissioner of Eastern Mass Babe Ruth Baseball, Mr. Matanes awarded the Quincy Babe Ruth charter to QBRL provided QBRL met the following conditions: (i) have a minimum of 48 players registered; (ii) field a minimum of four teams; and (iii) all returning players and players who tried out to make a team.

As of Oct. 1, 2008 QBRL: (i) has approximately double the minimum amount of players required to register; (ii) plans to field a minimum of eight teams for the 2009 season; and (iii) all returning players and new players trying out will make a team. All the conditions of Mr. Matanes' letter have been met; hence, QBRL effective Feb. 3, 2009 will be the sole organization in Quincy awarded a charter from Babe Ruth Baseball League, Inc.

Due to an administrative oversight both QBRL and another Quincy organization hold charters from Babe Ruth League, Inc. effective until Feb. 2, 2009. Mr. Matanes' letter serves to eliminate this duplication.

In connection with the award of the charter, New England Babe Ruth League has awarded the 2010 15-year-old Babe Ruth New England Regional Tournament to QBRL as the host. The winner of the Tournament will advance to the Babe Ruth World Series.

QBRL welcomes all players from ages 13-15 who have not registered to attend another tryout on Oct. 19 and 19, 2008 at 9:30 a.m. at Adams Field. Note that in order to be eligible to tryout for the 2010 regional team; players must register with QBRL for the 2009 season. Players who move into Quincy after registration closes for the 2009 season are not subject to this requirement.

All 13-year olds will play in a 13-year old Prep League along with playing on their league teams.

Dick Lombardi
President of Quincy Babe Ruth League, Inc.

Praise For Koch On GIC Health Plan Acceptance

The recent news that the City of Quincy's public employees voted to join the state-run Group Insurance Commission health care system is good news for the City of Quincy, for the city's public employees and for the city's residents.

The GIC health care plans will begin July 1, 2009 and should offer savings of $5 million in the next fiscal year. Kudos to Mayor Tom Koch for his role in making this historic switch to the larger state pool of public employees. A year ago teachers went out on an illegal strike. Since then there had been an adversarial relationship between the teachers' union and City Hall. The mayor's ongoing negotiations with the teachers' union worked. Both sides reached agreement.

Recently, several Quincyites had criticized the mayor for forgiving a large part of the fine levied on that union for illegally striking. However, the mayor wisely did so to seemingly help break the logjam. Mayor Koch properly praised the city's teachers and gives them "the credit" for "helping us stay viable as a city."

As a state employee since 1972, I believe joining the state's GIC plan not only saves money for taxpayers but also gives city employees options for their health care at an affordable cost.

Now, however, is the time for Mayor Koch and the city's police officers to work out their issues. An adversarial relation hurts everyone in the city.

Time to put the past in the past.

More Modern Methods Planned For Hospital

By FRANK McCAULEY

"More modern management and professional techniques" along the lines recommended in the Farnish and Ernst reports will be instituted at the Quincy Hospital, City Manager William J. Deegan, Jr. said in a statement.

The statement was made after Deegan conferred with the city council in an informal session at City Hall. Press and the public were barred from the meeting.

Among the recommendations contained in the reports was a recommendation for the establishment of an office of business manager.

Laurie's E-Zy Zucchini Bake

Recipes in a barber shop? If they are at my daughter Nancy's shop, there is usually a recipe or two floating around.

And so it was one busy Saturday morning when Laurie, one of the barbers, had me taste a piece of her zucchini bake. It was so different, and easy and one in which can either be a side dish or an appetizer.

LAURIE'S ZUCCHINI BAKE

1 cup Bisquick

3 cups very thinly sliced zucchini (it can be done on a slice part of a cheese grater)

1/2 cup grated onion
1/2 cup Parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons fresh parsley
1/2 teaspoon oregano
salt and pepper to taste
1/2 teaspoon garlic powder
4 eggs (slightly beaten)
1/3 cup vegetable oil

Grease a 13 x 9-inch pan. In a bowl, mix all ingredients together. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 30 minutes.

When cooled, keep in the pan, and cut into any size squares depending on how you want to serve them.

The Friends of Wollaston Beach will meet tonight (Thursday) at 7 p.m. at the Beechwood Knoll School, Fenno St., Wollaston.

Steve Perdios of the Quincy Environmental Network (QEN) will present "Neponset RiverWalk."

The plan consists of side-walks in developed areas and unpaved paths through woods and along extensive salt marshes which are vital breeding areas for fish and shellfish.

The Riverwalk's marshes extend from Boston Scientific on Cdr. Shea Blvd. all the way to the Red Line Bridge, then from the Adams Inn to the antennas on the Singsinger Broadcasting Company parcel near President's Golf Course, and on Riverside Avenue in East Milton past the Neponset Yacht Club at Granite Avenue and along Gullivers Creek to West Squantum Street.

story began in pre-war Germany where her grandmother learned to knit but it was placed on hold while she ran a literature program for elementary school children in Maine.

World War II Posters Exhibit Opens At Library

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Radios blared news of World War II and newsreels at the movie theaters showed American troops marching across Europe and ships taking strategic Pacific Islands one by one on their way to Tokyo.

In their own way, the bright, colorful and startling World War II posters played a key role, both as another medium and a morale booster.

Chattering subway passengers were warned that "Loose Lips Sink Ships," in a postershowing a U.S. Navy battleship sinking.

Billboards carried the same stark warning as well as paintings of dark shadows and the statement, "He's watching you" or "Keep Him Goose-Stepping" with a caricature of a Nazi soldier.

Americans got multiple messages on silence, work and savings with popular posters recommending that they grow their own food, "Work. Fight. Sacrifice," and "Buy War Bonds."

In an effort to attract female workers to defense plants, one poster portrayed a handsome GI and a pretty girl with the hair curlers of the 1940's wrapping her hair.

"My girl is a WOW Girl," says the poster's soldier about the corps of Women Ordnance Workers.

Visitors to Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy Center, can now view dozens of the original World War II posters, thanks to Harold Crowley, a member of the library Board of Trustees and President of the Friends of the Library.

"We must have 60 posters," Ann McLaughlin, Library Director, said, noting that Crowley donated the original World War posters that he has been collecting for the past decades.

McLaughlin said the library also will be showing a collection of Norman Rockwell's World War II illustration as well as memorabilia from library patrons, such as ration stamps.

The poster exhibit is being presented in conjunction with the library's current World War II program which includes a film and discussion series currently underway on six consecutive Tuesdays.

The panels in the Coletti Reading Room will feature American and British posters as well as Quincy photographs and memories of the war years.

Next Tuesday, Oct. 7, Professor Dan Breen of Newbury College will lead a discussion entitled, "The Home Front."

Breen, a professor of history at Newbury College, has previously presented library programs on World War I and the Great Depression.

"He's extremely knowledgeable. He puts history in context, makes it come alive," Megan Allen, Assistant Director, said of Breen's presentations.

He, also, talks about how history is relevant to what's happening today," Allen said.

And that's very important, according to McLaughlin.

"It's important now because so many of the World War II veterans are dying," said McLaughlin of efforts to preserve history.

"Everybody needs to learn something, hopefully, from history," said McLaughlin, adding that it's important "to honor sacrifices people made."

McLaughlin has invited anyone with recollections of the war years to submit a blog to the library site on World War II.

Individuals need not have fought in the war, but may describe experiences on the homefront during those years.

"This is the first time we asked people to participate."

McLaughlin said of personal narrations and loans and gifts of memorabilia.

According to the library's World War II site, 16.1 million Americans served in World War II and fewer than three million are alive today.

The site, also, notes that approximately 1200 World War II veterans live in Quincy.

Persons interested in submitting information or blogs should access the library World War II site or call 617-376-1301.

The October programs include the following films and discussions on World War II. All begin at 7:30 p.m.

SILENCE MEANS SECURITY was one slogan used to warn Americans that talk of troop or Naval movements could be overheard by enemy spies in the United States. Library Director Ann McLaughlin who, with her staff, is preparing an exhibit of World War II English and American posters and photographs at Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy Center.

Fontbonne Academy is Proud of Jennifer DeLuca '05

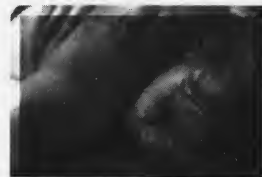

Jenn DeLuca is a senior at the College of the Holy Cross double majoring in Spanish and psychology. She has served as a Resident Assistant, Advertising Editor for the Holy Cross newspaper, and wrote the first daily blog for the Holy Cross website. This past summer she spent working on campus at the Residence Life Office.

"Fontbonne Academy prepared me for college intellectually, socially and spiritually. Fontbonne's rigorous curriculum, though daunting at times, made the transition to the challenging course load at Holy Cross seamless. Also, being involved in numerous groups at Fontbonne laid the groundwork for me to become highly involved and readily take on leadership roles at Holy Cross. Fontbonne taught me to embrace my spirituality and to stay aware of the needs of others and the role that I can play in making a difference."

Recycling In The Park Is 420-Pound Success

The "Recycling in the Parks" trial program, which was begun in July, has already collected 420 pounds of recyclable material in less than three months.

The recycled material will be turned in for cash, said the DPW's John Sullivan, while at the same time removing 420 pounds of trash from the city's waste disposal expense.

A win-win situation on all fronts, said Sullivan, noting that citywide the total solid waste disposal stream is down 1,110 tons and recycling is up 64 tons under "Single Stream."

The "Recycling in the Parks" trial program consisted of placing blue 55-gallon recycling drums with pink ribbons at Pageant Field, the Sailing Program, Adams Field and the Fenno Street basketball courts.

The program was initiated by the volunteer Quincy Recycling Committee with logistics and manpower supplied by the Department of Public Works and the Park Department.

The work was greatly enhanced by the donation of $490 from Marina Kelly, a member of the Quincy Environmental Network, in memory of her mother, Virginia, who died of breast cancer in 2006.

The money went to pay for steel lids and biodegradable liners.

The success of the trial program encouraged Kristen Powers, executive director of Parks and Cemeteries, to extend it to Veterans Stadium during the high school football and soccer seasons.

Plans are also underway to include the recycling barrels at special events during the winter months.

The Quincy Recycling Committee will meet Wednesday, Oct. 15, at 7 p.m. in the DPW commissioner's office at 155 Sea St. to discuss further recycling programs.

Some of those programs are increased recycling in the schools, condos and apartment buildings; collecting ink cartridges and toner for cash, a no idling city ordinance; and a tour of the Recycle America facility in Avon.

For further details on recycling, call John Sullivan at 617-376-1953.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Risky Behavioral Patterns

I'd like to take this opportunity to explain what I specifically mean by behavioral patterns that place us at a higher risk with fire, while conveying a few examples here as well.

Years ago, I must have had a discussion with my mother-in-law discouraging her from her habit of placing combustibles, newspapers specifically, on the stove top. At the time she had an electric stove within a small working kitchen and apparently using that space was convenient.

After our discussion she discontinued that practice.

Months later she became aware that she accidentally left a burner on one day. She returned home to discover it so, and later conceded that if she had continued her habit of using the stovetop as a counter, she would have lost her home.

In this instance, she had a behavioral pattern where she placed combustibles onto potential ignition sources. She then had to consciously remind herself of the risk in doing so in order to break that habit, she did, and she saw the fruits of that effort when one day the ignition source, a stovetop burner, was left on and unattended. Simply put, this is an example of successful proactive fire prevention. Some effort was applied at changing a habit, and consequently a behavioral pattern was changed, and a tragedy was averted. It is a success story.

Do I personally practice everything I preach? I will tell you this; no matter how many bundles I arrive home with after being at the supermarket, whether paper or plastic, none go onto a stovetop if counter and table space are full. I won't knowingly leave the property if the clothes dryer is left on either. I see choosing not to do so as a positive, proactive behavioral pattern changed where I've seen to many dryer fires during my career.

What are some other risky behavioral patterns? Statistics tell us a great deal. Smoking while lying on a couch or on a mattress is an invitation for disaster. A common scenario and the leading cause of home fire deaths. To eliminate such a practice is a step toward a safer home and one's personal welfare.

Leaving cooking unattended is the most prevalent cause of home fires. Another habit worth looking at if you can relate with doing so in your own home. Loading seasonal appliances onto power strips, which are not made for the types of electrical current drawn by air conditioners, or space heaters for that matter, is a risky pattern.

Leaving candles unattended, 60% of candle fires start this way, should tell you something. Grilling on decks and porches rather than doing so further away from your house is placing your property at risk.

Can you think of any practices that place you at risk? Any scenarios that place combustibles too close to potential ignition sources, or where ignition sources are left unsupervised?

One might argue that I've been doing something a certain way for years with have and maybe you have been lucky so far, or on the uneventful side of statistics. Meanwhile it does not take much time or effort to scrutinize our behavior and take steps toward safer choices in our routine.

Please consider doing so.

COLORFUL UMBRELLAS were the order of the day as the cancer walkers sloshed their way over the four mile route from Pageant Field to Wollaston Beach and back.

1,000 Defy Rain To Do Their Part

QMC Cancer Walk Raises $200,000 For Curry Fund

Some 1,000 intrepid walkers, squishing through some puddles and sidestepping others, defied the rain and cold to raise close to $200,000 Sunday in the 11th annual Quincy Medical Center Cancer Walk.

The funds raised benefit the Marie A Curry Fund, a permanently endowed fund at QMC which provides free screenings and education to the community regardless of ability to pay.

"It is so wonderful to see such a strong demonstration of support from our community," said Dr. Gary Gibbons, president of QMC, who made the four-mile trek from Pageant Field to Wollaston Beach and back.

"And donations are still coming in from those who were unable to attend the walk because of the inclement weather, so we are thrilled that this is shaping up to be our most successful fundraiser ever.

"We are overwhelmed by the generosity of our community, which is helping to ensure that residents of our community can get high quality cancer care right here in Quincy and raise awareness about early detection."

Since its inception the QMC Cancer Walk has raised more than $1.5 million to support the fund.

SPIKE THE CLOWN helped to raise the spirits of the walkers when they most needed it on a dreary Sunday afternoon.

More than 80 teams participated in the walk under a colorful array of umbrellas and rain gear, including families, local businesses, scout troops and students from several high schools.

After the walk, participants were treated to face painting, henna tattoos, massages, games and an array of food donated by a variety of local business firms.

They included Chipolte, Outback Steakhouse, China Pearl, as well as many local pizza shops and Dunkin' Donuts stores.

Entertainment was provided by DJ Suzie Cue and Max-Q Productions while the Freemasons conducted the MYCHIP (child identification) program.

CANCER WALKER'S pace quickened noticeably as they reached Hancock Street on the way back to Pageant Field.

IMPATIENT WALKERS chomp at the bit as they listen to brief talks before embarking on the four-mile cancer walk.

Keka's daughter, Madison, 4, wanted to dip into frosting but, waited along with her brother, Christian, for Topi to return.

As his little country struggles to convert to democracy, it was fitting that President Topi met American citizens born in Albania and American citizens of Albanian descent who told stories Saturday of thriving in the American democracy.

Ervin Kulenica, 30, said that God told him to leave Albania ten years ago.

"I showed up on the shores with $120," said Kulenica, likening his arrival to those landing on Ellis Island. He knew no one. "I started from scratch."

For years, he worked as a bus boy at Pier Four owned by the late and famous Albanian, Anthony Athanas, then completed his degree in electrical engineering at Boston University. He now works as an engineer, is married and lives in Quincy with his wife, a journalist.

Others, too, had stories Saturday of working hard toward success in America.

"We're out of the country since 1989," said Robert Sholla who owns Polygraphix Printing on Federal Avenue.

Edmond Celo who owns Cela's Restaurant, Hancock Street, left Albania in 1995.

Back in the 1980's and 1990's when they immigrated, Albania was shut off from the world and American passports were stamped prohibiting travel to two countries, China and Albania.

"Albania was closed to the world from 1946 to 1997," said Ron Zooleck whose grandfather Thomas Zooleck, then 16, immigrated to the United States in 1916.

Ron Zooleck was a former president of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

On Saturday, Dorian Alba said, "We were 50 years in communism, the worst communist country in Eastern Europe. If you say the wrong thing, they shoot you."

In the past decade, Albania has undergone tumultuous change as the country inches from a closed and poor society toward democracy and prosperity.

Zooleck discovered his large Albanian family of some 60 relatives about ten years ago. Since then, he has trained Chambers of Commerce in the area and returned periodically to visit the new found relatives that he never knew existed.

"Every time we go back, it's better and better, more businesses, more companies. We see more people staying, developing condos on the Adriatic." Said Zooleck, describing the beauty of the Albanian coastline.

Celo, also said that he's seen "...a lot of changes for the good. The country's got freedom."

"I go back visiting," said Kulenica. "It's the most beautiful country with miles and miles of (untouched shoreline)."

"He's really dedicated to reforms," Genci Jori said of Topi. Jori recently read David McCullough's biography of John Adams.

"It is really a good thing for the City of Quincy and the President of Albania. All the presidents have something to learn here."

A Job Well Done

On Saturday, September 20, 2008, at approximately 6 p.m., Officer Matt Patten was dispatched to the Gilbane Construction site on Huntley Road to investigate a reported break to the site. Officers Steve Kelly, Mike Duran and Detective John Menz arrived on scene first and had a male suspect detained.

LT. DAN MINTON

The security guard told the officers he was patrolling on the Coddington Street side of the construction site when he heard a loud noise, which reassembled a motor vehicle crash coming from the opposite side of the yard. Upon his arrival, the guard saw that the gate that was closed was completely destroyed and hanging from the hinges.

Immediately after seeing the gate, the guard saw a male suspect operating a large aerial lift traveling north on Woodward Avenue away from the construction site. Knowing this piece of equipment belonged to the GILBANE Construction Company and was located inside the fenced area, the guard ran after the lift and was able to stop the suspect approximately fifty feet away from the gate. The guard ordered the suspect to shut the machine off, which he did.

When the guard asked the suspect what he was doing, the suspect said, "I'm going for a test drive." The guard ordered the suspect off the machine and phoned the Quincy police. It appeared that keys were left in the ignition of the lift. The suspect, a 27 year old Quincy resident, was charged with "Larceny and Malicious Destruction to property." Video surveillance cameras captured the action and will be used in court.

A JOB WELL DONE . . . On Sunday, September 21, 2008 at 6:40 p.m., Officers Matt Patten and Mike Duran were dispatched to Father Bill's Place for an out of control male. Officers' Patten and Duran arrived on scene and spoke with staff, who were pointing at a male with a red shirt in front of Fratellis Bakery. They stated that the male suspect had just thrown a brick through a large glass window located in the front of the building, shattering the glass everywhere. Officers' Patten and Duran stopped the suspect and informed him of the accusations of throwing a brick through the window. The suspect retorted, "I didn't throw a brick through the window - I threw 2 bricks because they wouldn't feed me." The suspect, a 57-year-old homeless person, was arrested and transported to the station where he was charged with "Wanton Destruction of Real Property."

A JOB WELL DONE . . . On Saturday, September 20, 2008 at midnight, Lieutenant John Steele was in the Fuji Restaurant with Officer Dave Coletti. As they walked out they observed a male at the corner of Hancock and Cliveden Streets kicking Lieutenant Steele's marked police cruiser. The male was facing away from the cruiser as he gave numerous back kicks to the doors. The officers ran over to him and immediately handcuffed him and placed him under arrest. When asked why he was doing this, the suspect said, "I'm just having a bad night - that just got worse." There was visible damage to Lt. Steele's cruiser, which was photographed for court purposes. The suspect, a 26-year-old Dorchester resident, was charged with "Malicious Damage to a Motor Vehicle." Nice Work!

Real Estate

Selling Your Home In A Buyer's Market

(ARA) - It's a buyer's real estate market, so every home seller needs to know how to price their home correctly. Price your home too high, and buyers will look at other houses. Price it too low, and you risk losing money.

To price your home correctly, you need to be savvy about your local real estate market. Understanding the market will help you set an asking price that will compete favorably against other comparable homes. It's easy to do if you just follow these simple steps:

1. Know the Competition: Visit real estate websites and drive through your local area to search for homes for sale that are similar to yours in size, number of bedrooms and bathrooms, lot size and square footage. Educate yourself about their asking prices and, especially for condos, calculate the price per square foot. Trulia.com will do most of this work for you and allows you to print out a list of comparable homes, but you'll also want to visit Realtor.com and ForSaleByOwner.com to get a more complete list of available homes on the market.

2. Visit Open Houses:

Now that you know what's on the market, visit as many open houses as you can in order to find out how your home compares to others. Your goal is to learn as much about those homes as possible, such as upgrades and renovations to the kitchen, bathrooms and bedrooms.

3. Learn About Recently Sold Properties: Your next step in educating yourself about the local market is learning how much homes have sold for in the recent past. Home sale information is public information and can be found a number of ways. Your county clerk's office and/or local town hall can provide you with this data, but the Internet has made the task even easier. Trulia.com and Zillow.com each have a "Recently Sold" feature that will list all information about properties that have sold near any given address.

4. Get a Starting Point:

For a simple, cost-effective way to get a ballpark range of how much your home is worth, consider getting an Automated Valuation Model (AVM). Similar to a real estate agent's Comparative Market Analysis, an AVM will compare your home to similar nearby recently sold properties. The AVM won't know if your home has an upgraded kitchen, finished basement or new roof, etc., but it will give you a suggested range to price your home. The AVM will also provide you with a list of nearby recently sold properties. An AVM tool is available at <http://www.forsalebyowner.com/appraisal>.

5. Evaluate Your Research: Now that you have information about homes currently on the market, data on recently sold properties and a price range, you have all the data you need to compare your home to others in your neighborhood and local area. Evaluate the information you have learned and ask yourself how your home stacks up with the others. Be honest. What condition is it in and how does it compare in location, features and aspects like a remodeled master bathroom?

6. Live in the Now: One of the biggest mistakes sellers are doing in today's market is pricing their home at price points of one, two or three years ago. The national median home price has dropped more than 15 percent from April 2007 to April 2008 (in markets in CA, FL and AZ the median home price has fallen by more than 20 percent!), and those that price their home too high will just see it sit on the market. The homes that are selling today are those that are priced competitively to other homes on the market, providing buyers with the sense that they are getting "a good deal."

7. Set the Price: The time has come. You now have a complete picture of your real estate marketplace. Set the price using all the information you've learned through the above steps.

Congratulations! You have reached a major milestone in your home selling process. Not only have you arrived at an asking price, you have become an expert in your local real estate market. Prospective buyers will be impressed with your sense of knowledge and honest assessment of your home's value, and you'll be able to communicate about its strengths and weaknesses as compared to other homes in your neighborhood, town and area.

Clearing Up Mold

Q. Our first floor recently was flooded during a period of heavy rain. We've since cleaned up, dried out all the furniture and replaced the area rugs (there are no carpets on the first floor). However, there is a mold smell throughout the house. I thought we had taken care of all the wet areas. Any ideas? — Tamara C., DeBary, Fla.

A. Water damage can be tough to completely repair. You've dried out your floors and the furniture appears dry, but there may be some hidden areas of the house that haven't been addressed.

Double-check your furniture: Moisture could have been wicked up through the cloth all the way through the padding. If the furniture has a wood frame, the wood beneath the padding may have stayed wet despite the cloth drying out. Additional drying sessions may be needed, or you can contact a furniture restoration specialist for tips.

The walls themselves may also be culprits. Check the base of the walls as high as the water went — if there is wallpaper covering the area, peel back a one-foot section of the paper to see the drywall beneath. Drywall (aka sheetrock) is susceptible to mold after severe flooding.

Check any area of your home that doesn't see much traffic, such as the crawlspace under the house, the garage, storage closets and so on. Look for standing water or excess moisture, and dry out those spots.

Finally, check your air conditioning and ventilation system — the outside unit may have been flooded and not dried out completely, or mold may be present inside the vents. An HVAC contractor can help clean the system.

Visible, surface mold can be quickly removed by wiping with a rag dipped in a half-and-half solution of bleach and water (wear rubber gloves, goggles and dust mask while doing this). However, if mold has set in to drywall or wood paneling, that section of drywall or paneling must be replaced.

Meantime, place a dehumidifier on your first floor to reduce the overall humidity and retard growth of mold spores.

How To Improve Your Home's Indoor Air Quality

(ARA) - There's been a lot of attention focused lately on the role indoor air pollution plays in our ability to live a healthy lifestyle. In fact, over the last several years, a growing body of scientific evidence has indicated that the air within homes and other buildings can be more seriously polluted than the outdoor air in even the largest and most industrialized cities.

The problem is so significant, the Environmental Protection Agency currently lists poor indoor air quality as the fourth largest environmental threat in the United States. EPA studies show that levels of air pollution inside the home are often two to five times higher than outdoor levels.

The problem is due in a large part to efforts to make homes more energy-efficient. New homes have been built increasingly air-tight during the past 15 years. Remodelers are tightening them up as well with new windows, caulking and insulation to prevent cool air from leaking out in the summer and warm air from escaping during winter. Synthetic building materials used in green building can release harmful chemicals into the air. Dust and mold, and fumes from common household items like air fresheners and scented candles add to the problem.

The result is an increase in the number of indoor pollutants that release gases or particles into the air. They are making thousands of people sick every year. But there are some simple steps you can take to protect yourself and your family.

Here are some of the most common indoor irritants and how to deal with them:

Pollutant: Wet or moist walls, ceilings, carpets and furniture, poorly maintained humidifiers, dehumidifiers and air conditioners.

Health Effects include eye, nose and throat irritation, shortness of breath, dizziness, lethargy, fever and digestive problems. Can cause asthma, humidifier fever, influenza and other infectious diseases.

Solution: Empty water trays in air conditioners, dehumidifiers, and refrigerators frequently. Clean and dry or remove water-damaged carpets. Install and use fans vented to outdoors in kitchens and bathrooms.

Pollutant: Cigarette smoke

Health Effects: Can cause eye, nose, and throat irritation, headaches and lung cancer, and may contribute to heart disease. Homes with one or more smokers may have particle levels several times higher than outdoor levels.

Solution: Do not smoke in your home or permit others to do so. If smoking indoors can't be avoided, increase ventilation in the area where smoking takes place. Open windows or use an exhaust fan.

In the past, many people were reluctant to install vent fans because they were noisy and annoying, but technology has come a long way. The Panasonic Home and Environment Company, for example, now offers the WhisperGreen line of ventilation fans that are not only quiet, but up to 460 percent more energy efficient than minimum Energy Star requirements. They have a revolutionary DC motor rated for continuous run, and are equipped with a Smart Action motion sensor that activates when someone enters the room they are installed in. Some models are even equipped with night lights.

"By using simple, affordable solutions, consumers can contribute to environmentally conscious building and, more importantly, protecting themselves from harmful indoor air pollutants," says Victor Flynn, the company's National Marketing Manager.

Don't Delay Home Repair Projects

(ARA) - Increasing costs have become evident in every aspect of our lives. In addition to daily expenses like gas and groceries, home improvement costs are escalating across the nation as well.

The cost of construction materials has risen more than 10 percent during the past year, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reports. In addition, the American General Contractors (AGC) of America find that construction costs have increased more than twice the overall consumer price. As the summer months rolled by, construction prices kept increasing. By the end of July, the cost of steel, a material widely used in home construction, had increased more than 90 percent in the past year, according to the AGC.

Transportation expenses are a main contributing factor to increasing home improvement costs. Semis powered by diesel transport many building products and diesel has drastically increased in price. These increases have, in return, been passed to the consumer. When expanding, remodeling or repairing your residence, you can expect the cost of materials for your project to be affected by transportation costs.

Asphalt shingles, which cover nearly 85 percent of roofs in America, are a prime example of a building material with significant price increases. "The price of asphalt shingles has risen due to the dramatic rise in the cost of their main ingredient -- asphalt," says Stephen McNally, vice president of sales and marketing for TAMKO Building Products Inc. The cost of asphalt increased 40 percent within the first two weeks of July alone, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

If you are planning a home improvement, don't be discouraged by rising costs. Consider purchasing higher-quality products that may cost more initially, but can save you money in the future. Many products are available, but one option that homeowners may not think of as a high-quality product is metal roofing. For example, MetalWorks Steel Shingles, which resemble slate, shake or tile roofing, are an aesthetically appealing product. They offer energy efficiency and a 50-year limited warranty -- two features that may save you money in the long term.

Homeowners planning to delay repair projects in hopes that prices will drop, can expect to pay a higher price the longer they wait. "When the prices of construction materials rise, they don't fluctuate like gasoline," says McNally. "These are the kinds of prices that go up and stay up."

Within the next three years, the cost of cement is estimated to increase 20 percent -- iron and steel prices more than 120 percent and copper prices nearly 170 percent -- according to the U.S. Department of Labor Statistics Producer Price Index. The rising cost of these raw materials will, in turn, raise the costs for a variety of items used in home improvements.

Whether planning to fix your leaky roof, add a deck for enjoyment or increase your living space, the price of building materials continues to climb. Regardless of the home improvement projects you are considering, it's important to remember that the longer you delay, the more you're likely to pay.

Get Your Home Ready for Old Man Winter

Now that many parts of the country have had a taste of the coming winter, it's a good time to give your home a final check before cold weather settles in.

- If you haven't had an annual inspection on your furnace, have it done before you're depending on it on a daily basis. At the very least, change the filter and buy a few spares.

- Windows cause some of the biggest heat losses in a house. Check for drafts (hold a candle in front of the window and look for flickering) and install "invisible" plastic sheeting or put up insulated drapes. The sheeting is especially good at blocking drafts, instead of allowing the cold air to flow to the floor, as drapes will.

- If you have a fireplace you won't be using for heat with an insert, consider blocking it so that all your heat doesn't go up the chimney. As heat rises, more cold air is drawn into the house.

- Consider installing a programmable thermostat that will raise the temperature only when you're going to be home.

- Use ceiling fans on slow reverse speed to move warm air off the ceiling and down into the room.

- An additional layer of insulation in the attic, either blown or rolls, will help keep the heat in the living levels. Insulate around the access hatch, too.

- A space heater can be a good source of temporary heat for a small space if you don't want to heat the whole house -- for example, while watching TV in the evening. If you plan to buy a space heater, do your homework and study the different types: convection, radiant, tower, rotating, fan forced, electric, kerosene, oil filled and others. Safety can be a serious issue with many types, such as kerosene, while others are known to consume a lot of electricity for the amount of heat they produce. Before you buy, check online reviews for the model you're considering. Look at Consumer Report for October 2007 as a place to start.

- Check wall switches and outlets for drafts on exterior walls, and install insulation pads.

- Check your dryer vent at the outside of the house. If it doesn't close completely when the dryer isn't running, you can end up with cold floors and frozen pipes in your laundry room.

Driveway Makeovers to Boost Your Curb Appeal

(ARA) - Whether selling a home in today's tough real estate market or simply trying to beautify and protect your home, curb appeal should be very important to you. Home selling experts predict that as many as 40 percent of potential buyers reject a home based on their first impression of the front of the home. That makes curb appeal -- the general appearance of the front yard -- the single largest factor shaping impressions of your home.

After lawns, driveways often make up the largest area of the front yard, and can really affect opinions of your home. "Driveways and sidewalks are the entryways to the home. If they're in great shape, you've got a strong first impression. If not -- you've said a lot about the quality of the home," says Gordon Bickie of Gardner-Gibson, a manufacturer of driveway, brick and patio sealers.

Unfortunately, driveways are often overlooked, spoiling an otherwise manicured landscape. Unless the drive is severely cracked, crumbling or poses a safety hazard, there's no need to spend thousands on removing and replacing it. There are easier options to makeover a tired driveway that boost the curb appeal of a home.

Drive to Impress

Create a great first impression and prevent expensive repairs by resealing your driveway. Renew the look of an old, worn blacktop driveway and fill in small cracks with fast-drying Black Jack Ultra-Maxx 1000, a flexible, long-lasting filler and sealer with a 10-year guarantee.

Light the Night

Installing low-voltage or solar landscape lighting can create a softly lit path to border the driveway. In addition to creating a pretty landscaping effect, the lighting can improve visibility and decrease the chances someone will accidentally drive onto the lawn.

Clean Up That Sidewalk

Frequently dirt, mold and algae settle on sidewalks due to their location, and that can create a really dismal first impression. Clean the walk with Driveway Kleen, a garden-safe spray solution that attaches to a garden hose. To protect stains from coming back, coat the sidewalk and adjacent pavers or edgers with Krystal Brilliance, a waterbased clear acrylic sealer.

Stop and Smell the Roses

Instead of having to keep the edge of the lawn trimmed against the driveway, create a "buffer" strip with a decorative rock garden or plant flowers along the path to create an inviting drive up to the home. If the driveway is shared with a neighbor, plant shrubs and flowers between them to create a small privacy wall.

Get an Edge

Edge the driveway with pavers in colors complementary to the home and pavement. Use pavers in different shapes and sizes to create an interesting focal point and frame the driveway.

"Consider your front yard the 'arms' that welcome visitors into a home," says Bickie. "Without a warm welcome, guests and potential buyers may just keep walking."

M.S.S., C.S.C.S.Too Tired to Exercise

Q. After a long day at work I am exhausted and too tired to exercise. I know I need to do some type of exercise, but I am not sure what I can do being so drained. How can I start exercising even though I am tired?

A. Hectic lifestyles can often leave you feeling as if you are too tired to exercise; however, a lack of exercise may be adding to your fatigue. Research has shown that not only can exercise help fight fatigue, it also can help increase energy levels and improve sleep. Low-intensity exercise such as walking at a steady but comfortable pace is a great place to start. Walking just a few times a week to start can begin to increase your energy levels and allow you to be less tired throughout your day. Be patient and begin to incorporate moderate exercise into your schedule.

Fighting the urge to skip the gym or deciding not to exercise can be a challenge at first; however, the more you begin to add exercise into your schedule and begin to see results, the more of a habit it will become. Participating in regular exercise is the key, and forming these habits may take time.

Begin with an activity you enjoy, and start slowly. Many exercisers have found that although they may have felt tired at the start of their workout, by the end they feel more energetic and alert. Set aside time in your schedule and try to stick with the plan. The more your body experiences and becomes accustomed to exercising, the more you can adapt to new expended calories and the good stress on your body.

This same effect has been linked to improvements in sleep quality among people who work out. In studies, regular exercisers have experienced increased feelings of alertness throughout the day after recording improved quality of sleep. They attribute this to an ongoing exercise program several times a week.

The results of regular exercise have many benefits, with the increase in energy being a great perk. Be sure to check with your physician to be sure your fatigue is not due to a medical condition, and once cleared, remember again to start slowly. Taking small steps toward beginning to exercise will allow your body to change over time. Push through any obstacles that will keep you off track or discourage you from sticking with your exercise program.

Always consult a physician before beginning an exercise program. If you have a fitness or training question, write to Andrea in care of King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts offers information about the importance of staying informed about breast cancer.

According to the American Cancer Society, breast cancer is one of the most common forms of cancer in women and a leading cause of cancer-related death. While a family history of breast cancer can increase a woman's risk for the disease, all women can take preventative measures in their lifestyle to reduce their risk of developing breast cancer.

In recognition of Breast Cancer Awareness Month, Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts' Prevention and Wellness Program is offering the following information on breast cancer awareness.

What is breast cancer?

Breast cancer is caused by the heightened growth of abnormal cells in the breasts and can originate in different parts of the breasts, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. While symptoms of breast cancer do not always surface and tend to vary with different people, the American Cancer Society encourages women to pay close attention to any lumps, changes, or tender areas in their breasts and consult with a doctor if any new lump or mass is discovered.

Breast Cancer Risks

While having one or more risk factors does not determine whether a woman will develop breast cancer, it is important for all women to understand their personal risk factors for developing breast cancer.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention most women who develop breast cancer are over the age of 50 and a woman's risk for developing breast cancer increases with age. The American Cancer Society encourages annual mammograms for women ages 40 and older, clinical breast exams every three years for women in their 20s and 30s, and breast self-exams for women in their early 20s as women who catch breast cancer early on have better chances for beating the disease.

Reducing the Risks• Exercise

Studies conducted by the American Cancer Society have found that exercise is an important component to ensuring an overall healthy lifestyle and reducing the risk of various diseases, including breast cancer. It is recommended that women exercise for 45 minutes to 60 minutes five or more days each week.

• Food & Alcohol Intake

The American Cancer Society recommends limiting daily alcohol intake and reducing excess fat consumption in order to decrease a woman's risk of developing breast cancer. Women who drink 2 to 5 drinks daily increase their risk of developing breast cancer by 1.5

times more than those who do not drink alcohol. The American Cancer Society also suggests that women be conscious of their consumption of high-fat foods as obesity can increase a woman's chance of developing breast cancer and weight gain specifically in the waist area further increases a woman's risk.

• Estrogen Intake

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, women who have supplemented their estrogen levels, whether by natural or artificial estrogen, have an increased risk of breast cancer. It is important to note that both oral contraceptives and hormone replacement therapy contain estrogen.

For more information on breast cancer, visit the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention website at <http://www.cdc.gov/> or BCBSMA's website at <http://www.ahealthyme.com/topic/home>.

Young Kids Twice As Likely To Get The Flu As Adults

(ARA) - School-age children would rather do chores, take a test or do homework than have to stay at home sick, according to the recent MedImmune Parent-Child Influenza Survey conducted by Harris Interactive. Being sick, they say, makes them feel bored, annoyed, gross and even sad. The National Center for Health Statistics estimates 38 million school days are missed each year by kids sick with the flu - that's a lot of unhappy children.

Parents can help kids avoid missing school because of the sniffles, aches and pains associated with the flu by making sure they get a flu vaccination every year as recommended by the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). There is even more emphasis on this for the 2008-2009 season, as an advisory panel for the CDC recently expanded its flu vaccination recommendations to include all school-age children through 18 years of age. And, they recommend kids be vaccinated as soon as vaccine is available for the season.

"Unfortunately, while many parents are aware that they can have their children vaccinated against the flu, according to a recent flu survey, too few parents think their children need to be,"

says Dr. Norman "Chip" Harbaugh, a pediatrician with the Children's Medical Group in Atlanta. "It's important that parents understand that the flu can be a serious illness and they should act now to vaccinate their children."

If flu vaccine is available at your health care provider's office when your kids go in for back-to-school check-ups, sports physicals or annual well-child visits, see if you can check flu vaccination off of your "to-do" list for the fall. Many offices and clinics may already have a supply of the needle-free, nasal spray flu vaccine FluMist (Influenza Virus Vaccine Live, Intranasal), which is approved for eligible people 2 to 49 years of age and has been shown to help provide protection throughout the flu season, even when administered early. By vaccinating during already-scheduled visits more children can be protected, which is especially important given the expanded flu recommendations.

Regardless of which kind of influenza vaccine option you choose, the important thing is to get vaccinated -- every year. This is especially important for young children, who are twice as likely as adults to get the flu each year. The flu is more than just a cold, it's a contagious disease that can be easily transmitted from person to person. In addition to fever, sore throat and headache, flu symptoms may also include fatigue and muscle aches that can last for more than two weeks.

Visit www.FluMist.com for more information. FluMist, availability in your area as well as important safety information and complete prescribing information.

SOUNDING THE SMOKELESS ALARM

Anyone who makes the switch from smoking cigarettes to smokeless tobacco believing it to be less harmful should think again. According to a recent study by the World Health Organization's (WHO's) cancer agency, using chewing tobacco and snuff raises the risk of oral cancer by 80 percent. While snuff and chew may be less dangerous than smoking because they are not linked to lung cancer, they are still linked to oral cancer. The review of eleven studies worldwide also showed that users of chewing tobacco and snuff also have a 60 percent higher risk of esophagus and pancreatic cancer. This study represents the first systematic attempt to quantify the risk of smokeless tobacco. If you use smokeless tobacco, or have in the past, you should be on the lookout for early signs of oral cancer.

Pain is rarely an early symptom. For this reason, all tobacco users need regular dental check-ups. We will do everything we can to assure your visits to us will be as comfortable and pleasant as possible. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where our entire staff is very proud to offer professional services to all our patients. Call 617-479-6220 today to schedule your appointment. Improving Red Raiders Defeat Plymouth South

By SEAN BRENNAN

Building off their 28-0 pasting of Sharon High School two weekends ago, the North Quincy Red Raiders continued to show marked improvement in their third game of the fall last Sunday night versus Plymouth South High School.

North Quincy (2-1 overall) continued its impressive defensive play, allowing only a fourth quarter touchdown (that is now just one TD allowed in the last eight quarters of play), en-route to a 12-7 non-league win over Plymouth South.

"We have been playing pretty well on both offense and defense these last two games," said NQ head coach Jim Connor. "We are being aggressive, which is good to see, and the team has really put together two solid games in a row."

"Plymouth South is a tough team and because of the rainy weather it made the game one of ball control and field position. It was a nice win in real bad conditions."

The game was originally scheduled to be played Friday night, but was moved to Sunday evening because of the heavy rain that blanketed the area over the weekend. But the wet weather did nothing to stop the early season roll that North Quincy has been on the past two weeks. After dropping their season-opener to Scituate High School 24-0, the Raiders have bore down, grinding it out on offense and playing smash mouth defense, and are now sitting pretty with 2-1 record.

Against Plymouth South—a former Atlantic Coast League foe—the Red Raiders got on the scoreboard first. With the score at 0-0 after one quarter of play, North Quincy junior halfback Pat Watkins rumbled into the end zone on a three-yard run early in the second quarter to give his team the 6-0 advantage. The point after attempt (PAT) was unsuccessful.

Watkins touchdown run finished off an impressive 13-play, 70-yard drive that featured zero passing plays. It was run, run and run some more for the Red Raiders on this drive.

"Our first scoring drive was well executed," said Connor. "With the weather being as bad as it was all day we just overpowered the Plymouth South defensive line on that drive and that is a testament to our offensive line and the work they did all game.

"We took the ball 70 yards on 13 running plays, running the football right down their throats, and Pat powered his way into the end zone to give us the lead."

After Plymouth South stalled on its next drive, North Quincy got the ball back with just over two minutes to play in the half and switched to the two-minute drill on offense. The change in strategy paid off handsomely.

Quarterback Michael Stanton found senior halfback Joe Vialpando wide open in the end zone for an eight-yard touchdown pass to finish off a 60-yard drive and giving North Quincy a 12-0 first half lead. The PAT was once again unsuccessful and the two teams entered the locker room with the Red Raiders leading 12-0.

"Unlike the first scoring drive, our second one was all passing," said Connor. "We went into our two-minute drill and quarterback Mike Stanton was solid. He didn't try to overdo anything and was careful with the ball. That was good to see, especially with time winding down in the half."

"We played offense with great balance all game and it showed on both of those second quarter scoring drives. With our deep running game and now a dangerous passing attack, we should be this balanced the rest of the season."

The Raider defense, which has been the word for North Quincy the last eight quarters, allowed a late fourth quarter touchdown (a 1-yard run by Blaine Theisan), but by that point time was on NQ's side and a second straight victory was ultimately secured.

"The defense was a total group effort," said Connor. "We had five or six sacks, an interception and several tipped balls. Our tackling was great; a total team effort."

"When they scored late in the fourth quarter, we had gone seven quarters without allowing a single point. The whole defense deserves credit."

When asked what has impressed him through the first three games, Coach Connor stressed that, "we have been healthy all year and that has helped us stay focused and prepared and it has given us the opportunity to work some things in and maintain some consistency."

The Raiders, who are now 8-6 over the last 14 games, next play on Friday night against Whitman-Hanson High School. Kickoff is scheduled for 7 p.m. at Veterans Memorial Stadium.

North Quincy Nips Quincy 2-1

The soccer match between the Quincy Presidents and the North Quincy Red Raiders boys' soccer programs last Wednesday afternoon at Veterans Memorial Stadium ended in high drama.

With the score knotted up at 1-1 in extra time, Quincy forward John Lewis broke in alone on North Quincy goaltender Ryan Louis but his attempt at a game-ending score sailed wide left and the Raiders quickly took advantage of the missed scoring opportunity with a goal of their own.

Junior midfielder Jon Couchenour started the game-winning scoring play by setting up senior forward Mike Prioli who in turn found senior forward Shane Regan in the box and Regan finished the play by burying a goal for the 2-1 win.

The Red Raiders (3-2-2 overall) got the scoring started with four minutes gone in the second half when sophomore Nick Carbone scored his first goal of the season, putting North up 1-0.

Quincy's John Lewis evened the score at 1-1 with his third goal of the season later in the half, setting up the dramatic ending to a well-played game.

"It was a wild one," said NQ head coach Rich Hanlon. "Every time we play each other it is no matter the records."

The 2-1 loss dropped the Presidents record to 0-6 overall.

"Definitely a heart-breaker. Our kids played hard," added Quincy head coach Jason Karalexis. "They had some chances, we had some chances. Unfortunately it didn't work out."

Both the Red Raiders and the Presidents have switched leagues this fall. Instead of playing in the Atlantic Coast League, both high schools are members of the Patriot League. This new league format means that last Wednesday's game will be the one-and-only time this season that the two city high schools are scheduled to play each other.

North Quincy is scheduled to play a home tilt against Whitman-Hanson HS today (Thursday) at 3:30 p.m. at Teal Field. The team follows this game with two Patriot League away games next week: Oct. 6 against Duxbury HS and Oct. 10 against Pembroke HS.

Quincy plays at home today (Thursday) against Middleboro HS (3:30 p.m., Varsity Field) and next week against Randolph HS (Oct. 6, 3:30 p.m., Varsity Field) and on the road against Rockland HS (Oct. 8).

The North Quincy roster includes seniors Paul DeLucia, Alex Filippi, Richie Kurtzman, Florian Mustafaj, Vishal Naik, Zack Omwenga, Parth Parikh, Mike Prioli (captain), Shane Regan (captain), Danny Russell and Dhiraj Tamang, juniors Alfredo Cabrera, Cody Cot, Jon Couchenour, Silas Debus, Tim Gillis, Ryan Louis (captain), Jake Mullaney, Leo Pulluqui and Kevin Therrian, sophomores Nick Carbone and Ricky Long and freshman Matt Costa.

NQ Girls Record 3-2-1

By SEAN BRENNAN

The North Quincy Red Raiders girls' soccer team started the season with two consecutive defeats, but recently, the team has rebounded nicely with a 3-0-1 record in their last four games to run their early season record to 3-2-1.

Losses to Somerville (1-0) and Hanover (5-0) were followed by a win over Randolph (2-1), a tie to Rockland (0-0), a win over Middleboro (4-3) and a victory over Quincy (2-1).

"We struggled early in the year getting our offense going but over the last few games we have been the more aggressive team on the field and it has improved our team overall," said head coach Paul Bregoli. "We are going to miss the offensive production that graduated last spring but we have the players back to be successful again and after starting 0-2 to come back with three wins and a tie, that puts us in a good spot moving forward."

Last Wednesday evening at Veterans Memorial Stadium, the Red Raiders and the Quincy Presidents faced-off in their lone meeting of the 2008 season. Quincy (0-5-1) took an early 1-0 halftime lead, but behind two-second half goals from NQ junior forward Cara Murtagh, the Raiders rallied for the 2-1 victory.

The one bright spot on an otherwise dreary night for the Presidents was the goal that was scored by senior Julie Leone in the first half. Leone's goal was the first of the season for Quincy and only the first goal scored by a Presidents player in close to two seasons.

Both schools have changed leagues this year from the Atlantic Coast League to the Patriot League, and because both schools play in separate divisions, this was the one and only time the city's high schools would play this fall.

On Sept. 22, the Raiders picked up their second Patriot League win with a thrilling 4-3 victory over Middleboro HS.

North quickly fell behind Middleboro 2-0, but two straight goals from Murtagh (with the assists going to junior Maria DiPietro and senior Brittany Folkins) tied the game at 2-2 entering the halftime break.

Middleboro would come back to retake a 3-2 advantage early in the second half, but Murtagh finished off the natural hat trick with her third goal of the game and fifth in the last two contests-off an assist from sophomore Shannon Coleman to even the game at 3-3.

With just over two minutes remaining in the game, senior captain Amy Carchedi, off a beautiful feed from Murtagh and junior Devon McKay, scored the game-winner.

"This was a statement game for the team," said Bregoli. "It was a big league game and I am not sure that Middleboro thought we had a chance, but the girls stepped up and came away with the big win."

"Cara has been phenomenal for us in the early going. We were looking for someone to fill the void after Emily Milone and Mary Kate Stille graduated and she has really stepped in and contributed."

On Sept. 18, North Quincy played Rockland HS to a 0-0 draw. The number one star for the Raiders was senior goaltender Siobhan Carnell (15 saves). Others playing well were Murtagh and senior forward Kerry Donaghey.

QHS Hockey Team Seeks Golfers, Sponsors

The Quincy High School hockey boosters, parents and players are holding a Golf Classic fundraiser to raise the funds required to build a storage room at the Quincy Ice Arena for their hockey equipment this winter.

The golfing fundraiser will be held on Thursday, Oct. 16 at Presidents Golf

"This 0-0 tie was like a win for our team," added Bregoli. "Playing on the road and against a good team in Rockland, we held our own. Siobhan Carnell was the story of the game for us. Her 15 saves are what earned us that tie."

The Raiders had picked up their first Patriot League victory on Sept. 16 with a 2-1 road win over Randolph HS.

Senior Amy Carchedi and junior Devon McKay scored the goals with junior Laura O'Donnell assisting on the game-winner.

"This should have been a 6-1 victory for us," said Bregoli. "But we missed some great scoring chances and only came away with the two goals, but it was good to get our first league win."

North Quincy had lost its Patriot League opener to Hanover HS 5-0 ("a very good team," said Bregoli) and its season-opening non-league game to Somerville HS 1-0 ("a tough loss to swallow," added Bregoli).

But with three wins and a tie over the last four games the Raiders are right back where they seem to be every year: in the running for a post-season berth.

"The year started slowly but we have gotten our feet under us and are starting to play Red Raider soccer," said Bregoli. "If we play physical and smart we should be alright the rest of the way."

The North Quincy roster: seniors - S. Carnell (captain), Lindsay Reilly, K. Donaghey, Molly Clifford, Jess Howlett, Lily Man, Jillian O'Brien (captain), Rachel Graham, B. Folkins (captain), Logan White, Erin Collins and Taylor O'Neill, juniors - C. Murtagh, Kristen Peterson, M. DiPietro, Rachel Lucier, L. O'Donnell, Dana Djerf, L. Repucci, D. McKay and Samantha Bonanni, sophomores - S. Coleman, Sara Gardiner and J. Carchedi and freshmen - Jonlyn Lydon and Kaleen Campo.

The Raiders are scheduled to play today (Thursday) against Patriot League powerhouse Whitman-Hanson HS on the road. Their next home match is Oct. 6 versus Duxbury HS (3:30 p.m., Teal Field).

The Presidents will play at the Varsity Field this Friday against Scituate HS (3:30 p.m.).

Course. The team, the parents and the boosters are seeking golfers, donations and hole sponsorships for this event.

Any donation that can be sent will be gratefully appreciated.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

How much do we really know? Very little, if the truth were known and frankly stated. During the lifetime of those people who have experienced fifty or more birthdays, the world has experienced many positive transformations. The fastest time President Washington ever made in a trip from Philadelphia was six days. Today a plane hardly gets off a runway in Philadelphia before it is descending on the city of Washington.

The advance in knowledge is, we believe, a very great advantage. The more we learn, the better we are prepared to face life and handle its problems. But now and again we are confronted with the realization that as a matter of fact we know very little compared with what there is to be known. New discoveries come so quick and fast that we can expect any morning we wake up to find that an utterly new era has been ushered in.

And when it is ushered in (if it ever is) then we can be rest assured that we will still be amazed over the little we know... What about the possibility of life on other planets? What about the marvelous area known only to those who travel in outer space?

Yes, indeed, today we live in one of the most interesting ages humanity has ever known...

Picnic Brings Back Memories And Hope To Star Of Sea 'Orphans'

It was a beautiful day in the neighborhood and to the parochial orphans of the Star of the Sea Church it brought back memories of church cookouts past.

To Sean Glennon, co-chair of the Friends of Star of the Sea, it was a perfect day.

"Family, friends and neighbors were celebrating together and having a great time," he said. "It reminded me of the good times we used to have on a regular basis when Star of the Sea was its own parish."

To Maureen Mazrimas, the other co-chair, it was like a reunion of classmates who had been apart for too long.

"The last time we got together socially was the weekend after the 9-11 tragedy," she said. "Now, seven years later, we knew it was definitely time to celebrate the vitality of the Star of the Sea community and that's exactly what we did here."

But it was more than just fun and nostalgia that drew at least 200 people to Sunday's cookout at the Robert I Nickerson Legion Post on Moon Island Road in Squantum.

It raised nearly $3,500 for the Friends of Star of the Sea to continue pursuing its appeal to the Vatican on the slender chance it will regain its former stature as a parish.

Star of the Sea was suppressed by the Catholic Archdiocese of Boston in October, 2004; reopened as a chapel limited to one Sunday Mass a week in July, 2005, and has filed a number of appeals with the Vatican since then.

The Friends want recognition as a parish, said Mazrimas, "or at the very least, to provide the sacramental liturgies that are so important to each and every Catholic --- baptisms, weddings and funerals --- within the community."

If the Archdiocese is earnest about its new faith renewal initiative called 'ARISE', she said, "it seems shortsighted not to give the faithful all the tools necessary to fully experience and enhance their faith."

Glennon said the money raised will be used for mailings, web hosting and maybe even civil litigation.

"The overwhelming support at this event gave us a mandate to push forward, even if our current appeal at the Vatican is denied," he said. "We are committed to exercise every possible option to restore our faith community to full parish status."

The Friends used the occasion to present the "Shining Star" awards to the late Lee Ann Ryan, who contributed so much of her time and energy to the organization, and Paul McCormack, a parishioner and usher for the past half century.

The prize was renamed the Lee Ann Ryan Shining Star Award and accepted by her sister, Lori Dow.

The event included face painting, tattooing, games and a moon walk ride for children and a raffle and auction for adults. The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office mobile command center was also on site for viewing and fingerprinting.

Glennon and Mazrimas thanked the Nickerson Post for providing a venue, Sheriff Michael Bellotti and friends for manning the grills and other sponsors and volunteers for their efforts.

Developer To Try Again

Planning Board Rejects B.J.'s Outlet

The Planning Board rejected plans for a B.J.'s Wholesale Warehouse at Crown Colony by a vote of 2-2 on Oct. 1, but proponents believe the proposal is far from dead.

City Council President and Ward 4 Councillor Jay Davis, said he was disappointed with the vote, but he expects the project will be revised and resubmitted and passed.

"The one thing I hear consistently on the soccer field is, 'When are we going to get B.J.'s?'" Davis said.

Planning Director Dennis Harrington cited traffic issues as among the major flaws detailed in reports from Traffic Engineer Jack Gillan and Nitsch Engineering.

"Both (reports) said it failed for pedestrian, truck and vehicle access and safety," said Harrington who noted that such plans require a positive vote from four members of the Planning Board for approval.

Harrington said two members of the Planning Board opposed the project and the fifth member was not eligible to vote because he had been hospitalized and recuperating during the preliminary hearings.

"We were concerned about B.J.'s from the beginning," Harrington said, adding that there, also, appear to be problems with Town Brook.

City Solicitor James Timmins said that B.J. officials can revise and resubmit the plans. "They may modify their plans and come back to the Planning Board."

Developer Michael DiGuiseppe of Coastal Partners, Beverly Farms, who has been guiding the project through the city's boards, expects the plans will be tweaked and, eventually, cleared by city officials.

Under the current plan, Coastal Partners would develop the project and lease the property to the Natick-based B.J.'s Wholesale Club.

The original plans call for an 84,000 square foot building on the 7.5 acre site of the former Patriot Ledger printing plant at the entrance to Crown Colony in West Quincy.

"We intend to try to figure this out with the Planning Board and working with the traffic engineer,"

St. Joseph's School Sought For QCAP Head Start Program

By TOM HENSHAW

The vacant St. Joseph's School in Quincy Point is under a purchase and sales agreement to Quincy Community Action Programs (QCAP) as a home base for the Head Start Programs.

The Massachusetts Development Finance Agency has given preliminary approval for QCAP to issue $2.5 million in revenue bonds to purchase and renovate the building at 556 Washington St.

Beth Ann Strollo, executive director of QCAP, agreed that the deal is under discussion but added that details of the negotiations with the owners, the Boston

Archdiocese, are "pre-mature."

"We have it under purchase agreement," she said. "but no determination has been made. We have made no decision on the bond. The situation is fluid."

AQCAP publication says that, if the sale goes through it "expects the renovation project to be completed by the summer of 2010 and to occupy the building upon completion."

Records at the Assessors office show that the tax-exempt school building is valued at $3,214,100 but the land is part of a two acre plot that includes St. Joseph's Church. It is valued at $742,700.

Purchase of the building would allow QCAP to pull together the scattered units of the Head Start Programs under one roof along with its management and administrative staff.

The vacant Catholic elementary school and attached gymnasium would serve some 220 low income children between the ages of 15 months and 5 years old in 14 classrooms.

According to QCAP's bond prospectus, the project would include creation of appropriate space for physical, occupational and mental health therapy and an indoor gross motor area and meet-

Challenges Kerry On Major Issues

Beatty Sees Senate Race 'David-Goliath' Battle

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Jeff Beatty, the Harwich Republican challenging Senator John Kerry this year, compares the upcoming senate race to the biblical battle between David and Goliath.

For the past months, Beatty's been conducting a grass roots campaign, meeting and greeting voters at veterans' shelters, senior citizen complexes, Chamber of Commerce breakfasts and local and urban newspaper offices.

In contrast, he said Kerry is barely campaigning for his senate seat.

"I like being David," Beatty said, adding that he's confident that voters are discouraged with Kerry who has represented Massachusetts for six terms, 24 years.

During last week's visit to The Quincy Sun newsroom, Beatty said he was eager to debate Kerry and that he will offer voters a positive choice. He visited the Sun with Jennifer Logue, Chair of the Republican City Committee.

Beatty said he has had over 40,000 individual contributors and over $3 million in campaign contributions.

Sen. Kerry has agreed to two debates, according to

Union President Philips Plans Return To Teaching

Paul Philips, president of the Quincy Education Association for the past 12 years through good times and bad, is retiring from that job and plans to return to teaching.

"I'm leaving because of the retirement system," he said. "My pension will max out in two years. I'd like to teach again before I go."

Philips, 56, who started teaching in 1975, has been on leave of absence from his job as an English teacher at North Quincy High School in order to head the union.

"They have to give me a job as a teacher since I was on a leave of absence," he said. "I've always wanted to go back to teaching. Some of my colleagues have said I was crazy."

PAUL PHILIPS

Philips will bow out of the president's post next July 1 when a successor is chosen. He'll start teaching in September, although he'll still be available for consultation should his successor need him.

The June, 2007, four-day walkout of the 900 teachers in support of their health benefits was "not the most pleasant" part of his tenure, said Philips, but most of his bargaining was uneventful.

"I had three units, the teachers, the assistant principals and the Quincy College faculty," he said. "I bargained 10 contracts. Most were done amicably. The strike was the other extreme."

Philips joined the Quincy school system 33 years ago as an English teacher at Point Junior High School, although they called his subject "language experience" in those days.

He became involved in union activity helping out Peg King, who was then chairman of the QEA's Public Relations Committee.

Later, King sat across the bargaining table from Philips as a member of the Quincy School Committee in 1992-93.

Once he has left the union presidency behind him, Philip expects his workload to lighten considerably.

"There'll be fewer things to do at night," he said. "Bargaining is always at night. And I won't have to go to School Committee meetings anymore."

Morrissey To Discuss Wind Energy In Quincy Oct. 14

The Quincy Environmental Network announces the first of a series of workshops on energy.

Senator Michael Morrissey will discuss the Green Communities Act and how it affects wind energy projects in Quincy Tuesday, Oct. 14 at the Quincy Historical Society, 8 Adams St., starting at 7 p.m.

The Act, which Morrissey co-authored, is a comprehensive new law that seeks to lower energy costs, promote the development of renewable energy, and encourage energy efficiency. This legislation will help municipalities, businesses, and residential consumers fight rising energy costs and reap the benefits of renewable energy.

One component of the act requires the state to provide up to $10 million/year in technical and financial assistance to communities, like Quincy, to help promote energy efficiency and invest in renewable and alternative energy sources.

The new law clarifies that the City of Quincy, or even a neighborhood in the city, could own a renewable energy facility. Net metering, a key feature of the act, makes such an option viable as it allows small facilities to apply energy produced to specific sites, as well as sell surplus energy to the grid at a fair rate. Wind and solar energy are the cleanest, most low-impact sources of energy. They also provide excellent economic benefits to local communities, supporting local jobs and industries and cutting down on energy costs.

Morrissey will be joined by a panel of representatives from organizations involved in wind energy projects. The panel, which includes Martha Broad from the Massachusetts Renewable Energy Trust, Larry Chretien from Mass Energy Consumers Alliance, and P.J. Foley from IBEW Local 2222, will contribute to the discussion and answer questions from the audience.

The event, free and open to the public, is sponsored by the Quincy Environmental Network's Climate Action Subcommittee, Clean Water Action, the Quincy Technology Council, Quincy 2000, and the Quincy Public School's Hyper Robotics Team. Refreshments will be served.

The second workshop in the series will be held Wednesday, Nov. 5 at 7 p.m. at the Thomas Crane Public Library, Quincy Center.

Michael Berry, chairman of the Sustainable Building Committee for the Builders Association of Greater Boston, will provide information on energy efficiency techniques to save money this winter.

Economic Impact Hailed

Harbor-South Tower Reopens As 'Green Building'

The HarborSouth Tower in North Quincy, redeveloped by Griffith Properties officially re-opened as a certified "Green Building" and welcomed new tenants with a ribbon-cutting ceremony attended by state and local officials.

The redevelopment, coordinated with the help of tax incentives from the City, will mean new jobs in the city with major tenant Mass Financial Services occupying space in the building, Mayor Thomas Koch said. City officials have pledged to fight the tough economy with a major economic development campaign, he said.

"This is exactly the kind of economic development that the City of Quincy will continue to aggressively pursue," said Koch. "Griffith Properties and MFS have shown a tremendous commitment with this investment that will include hundreds of jobs, much needed tax growth, and a wonderfully renovated Green building at the gateway of our city."

"I am grateful for their confidence in Quincy, and believe it will be the first of many similar projects in the near future."

The HarborSouth Tower has been vastly renovated, to become essentially a new building, with environmental upgrades including superior indoor air quality and use of natural light compared to office standards of even just a few years ago, Griffith officials said.

According to independent research by the California Public Utilities Commission and the California Energy Commission, building designs that incorporate superior indoor air quality, daylighting and quality views can improve employee productivity by having more outside air circulate through the workplace and by ensuring that natural daylight floods the floor resulting in less employee absenteeism. HarborSouth Tower is delivering 40 percent more fresh air than required by building code, officials said.

Griffith Properties is pursuing a Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) Core &

Shell Certification for HarborSouth—a higher standard that is typically reserved for new construction in lieu of the LEED EB rating for Existing Buildings, due to the comprehensive nature of the redevelopment of the 25-year-old building. Some other sustainable upgrades include drought tolerant planting to reduce irrigation by 50 percent, energy performance that is 40 percent better than buildings of comparable age, and preferred parking for fuel-efficient cars and carpools.

Griffith, in a joint-venture partnership with Ur-dang Capital Management, Inc. and its Value-Added Fund II, this summer completed the redevelopment of the 206,000-square-foot, 10-story Class A office tower located at 100 Hancock St., North Quincy.

Thou Shall Not . . . Stop Thief!

Obviously, the person who needed it the most wasn't listening.

While the minister was preaching the Ten Commandments --- like Thou Shalt Not Steal --- inside the Wollaston Congregational Church, a thief was outside making off with her car.

Around noon Sunday, when the Rev. Mary Louise Gifford had concluded her 10 o'clock sermon and greeting her flock she went to her office and found the door damaged and her car keys missing.

Them she went outside and found her 2005 Pontiac Vibe and her pocketbook missing, too.

It's sad, she said, that someone would be so desperate that they had no choice but to steal.

Police took a more pragmatic view. At last reports, they were still seeking the culprit, and it wasn't to cheer him up.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Oct. 1, 1924, future President James Earl Carter is born in Plains, Ga. Carter was the son of a peanut farmer and was the first president to be born in a hospital. Carter graduated from the Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md., in 1946.

• On Sept. 30, 1930, jazz trumpeter and singer Louis Armstrong arrives in New York to join Fletcher Henderson's renowned jazz band. Among his hits were "Blueberry Hill" and "What a Wonderful World." Armstrong died in 1971 at age 69.

• On Oct. 3, 1941, "The Maltese Falcon," starring Humphrey Bogart as hard-boiled detective Sam Spade, opens. Bogart joined the Navy during World War I and was injured in an attack. His upper lip was scarred and partially paralyzed, giving him the tough-guy poker face and slight lisp that characterized his acting.

• On Oct. 4, 1957, the successful launch of the unmanned satellite Sputnik 1 by the Soviet Union shocks and frightens many Americans, who wonder how the Soviets could have gotten so far ahead of the United States. Eisenhower responded by speeding up the U.S. space program, and the satellite Explorer 1 was launched on Jan. 31, 1958.

• On Oct. 2, 1962, Johnny Carson starts his new job as host of "The Tonight Show," where he would stay for almost 30 years. In 1965, Carson insisted on delivering his monologue at 11:30 instead of 11:15 because many stations ran news until 11:30 and didn't join "The Tonight Show" until the half hour.

• On Oct. 5, 1974, American David Kunst completes the first round-the-world journey on foot, taking four years and 21 pairs of shoes to complete the 14,500-mile journey across the land-masses of four continents. He left his hometown of Waseca, Minn., on June 20, 1970.

• On Sept. 29, 1982, the last of six people in Illinois dies from taking Tylenol capsules laced with poison. The Tylenol murders were never solved, but the crisis led drug makers to develop tamper-proof packaging, which had been largely nonexistent before the Tylenol terrorist struck.

A Leader Like FDR

Who will it be?

John McCain or Barack Obama?

We will soon know. Nov. 4 is just 26 days around the corner. And let's hope the final choice is the right one because we are going to need real leadership the next four years and after.

That $700 billion bailout isn't a magic cure all.

Hopefully, it will get us out of our financial mess as they claim. But we need someone to keep us out and lead us through the tough times that may be lurking ahead.

Is Obama or McCain that man?

I don't know about you but I hope the winner has a bit of Franklin Delano Roosevelt in him.

FDR would have been the right man for the job today as he was in the 1930s and 1940s.

He brought the country through the Great Depression of the 30's-a crisis he inherited as President in 1932, and through World War II.

Among other accomplishments was the enactment of the Social Security Act.

He was a man who restored confidence and rallied the nation through the bad times and the crucial. Those words in his Inaugural Address, "The only thing to fear is fear itself," set the tone for his administration.

He had his critics-some of them haters. But those who believed in him-and had faith in him, as most did, loved him. He was their inspiration. Especially with his Fireside Chats on radio.

Roosevelt was the only President re-elected to a third and fourth term.

Members of the dubbed "Greatest Generation" grew up knowing him as their only President.

He was in the White House when they entered grade school, graduated from high school and entered the armed forces in World War II.

When the Japanese sneak attacked Pearl Harbor Dec. 7, 1941, it was, Roosevelt said "...a date which will live in infamy" and once again rallied the nation, vowing victory.

At the time of his sudden death in 1945, he had led the country and its Allies to the edge of certain victory.

McCain

I will always remember April 12, 1945 when my ship was in San Diego getting ready to go back out to the Pacific and Okinawa after repairs.

And the word was passed to the crew: "President Roosevelt has died." We were stunned. So stunned, a friend could only say "How are we going to win the war now?"

That's how important a figure and inspiration he was.

We've heard of talk in this year's campaigning about "reaching across the aisle" for Democrats and Republicans to work together on various issues.

Roosevelt did more than that. A Democrat, he brought prominent Republicans into the White House as members of his cabinet.

Among them: Secretary of War Henry Stimson, Secretary of Interior Harold Ickes, Secretary of Navy Frank Knox, Secretary of Treasury William Woodin, Secretary of Agriculture Henry Wallace.

And the first woman cabinet member, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

Roosevelt was elected and re-elected to four terms by wide margins:

1932: Roosevelt 22,822,000 to incumbent Herbert Hoover's 15,762,000.

1936: Roosevelt 27,752,000, Alfred Landon 16,680,000.

1940: Roosevelt 27,244,000, Wendell Willkie 22,305,000.

1944: Roosevelt 25,602,000, Thomas Dewey 22,006,000.

Here in Quincy, then a staunch Republican stronghold, things were quite different. Roosevelt lost the city to four Republicans.

1932: Hoover 16,872, Roosevelt 12,268.

1936: Landon 17,627, Roosevelt 15,116.

1940: Willkie 20,407, Roosevelt 16,878.

1944: Dewey 20,800, Roosevelt 15,097.

Things, of course, have changed since then. With the coming of John F. Kennedy, and locally, Jim McIntyre and other young Democrats, Quincy shifted from Republican to a Democratic city.

Roosevelt's years in the White House weren't perfect. He had his setbacks like trying to revamp the Supreme Court with six new members.

But he will be remembered for his leadership in both peace and war.

He was the right man at the right time.

Let's hope the winner Nov. 4 is the right man at the right time.

Maybe something like FDR.

Edible Art Talk Oct. 19 At Thomas Crane Library

What's cooking at the Thomas Crane Public Library?

Art that can be eaten, that's what!

Liz Barbour of The Creative Feast will demonstrate the creation of buffet tables that become works of edible art Sunday, Oct. 19, at 3 p.m. in the Main Library, 40 Washington St., Quincy Center.

Barbour, who has been cooking professionally in the Boston area since 1992, will show how flowers, herbs, seasonal fruits and vegetables and found items can be displayed on a holiday buffet.

The landscape demonstration will be followed by a cooking demonstration of two seasonal side dishes perfectly matched to the edible landscape.

Barbour presents it all with a relaxed and humorous attitude toward food that demystifies the cooking process.

Registration is required and may be made by calling 617-376-1316. The program is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Scenes From Yesterday

THIS IS A 1915 postcard view of Perry Beach in Houghs Neck looking north along what was known then as North Harbor on the left. Because of the mudflats here many cottages had long piers extending out to the waters edge to reach their boats. This stretch of the beach took a battering from the great 1898 Portland Storm resulting in the closure of ocean access to Manet Lake at today's Bayswater Road. The storm may also have been the cause of all the rocks shown on the beach, which could not have been very comfortable to sit on. To contact Tom Galvin, e-mail tmgalvin@verizon.net.

Della Chiesa Tops Ticket, Burke's Strength Surprises

By FRANK MCCAULEY

The surprising citywide strength shown by Ward Five Councillor George G. Burke featured the preliminary election in which Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa and Council President Charles L. Shea were nominated as mayoral candidates. The mayor led his challenger: 8,287 to 4,941.

Burke ran up a 8,049-vote to top the seven councillor at-large candidates. He showed power throughout the city, topping the list in five out of six wards. Spirited ward councillor fights in Ward One and Ward Three featured the ward council contests. Leo J. Hannon, a real estate broker, topped a list of five candidates in Ward One with 1,110 votes, while banker Frank McCauley polled 1,106. In Ward Three, John F. Koepler, 449 votes and Leo Burke, 439 votes, were nominated.

INCINERATOR SITE OPPOSED

A petition of 922 names opposing the location of an incinerator on the Swingle's Quarry property as recently proposed by Peter G. Ruscitto, was introduced in the City Council by Ward Four Councillor George B. McDonald. McDonald said some 300 more names would be added to the petition. McDonald recorded himself in "strong opposition" to the proposed incinerator site.

He explained his opposition was based largely on the fact that trucks would have to pass over streets that are winding and narrow.

Drug Task Force Symposium Oct. 16

The Quincy Drug Task Force will hold a citywide symposium featuring state and local experts and a nationally renowned speaker Oct. 16 at 6 p.m. at Broad Meadows Middle School.

"Public awareness is a critical piece of our strategy to stem the drug problem in our city, and I believe this program will provide a great opportunity for the entire community to come together and begin asking questions and thinking about ways we can fight this epidemic," said Mayor Thomas Koch, who created the task force after taking office in January.

The program will feature a presentation by the Massachusetts Department of Public Health on drug abuse statistics in Quincy and the surrounding area to show the gravity of the issue in the city.

The presentation will be followed by a talk by Ginger Katz, whose son died of a drug overdose in the aftermath of the tragedy. She travels the nation presenting a message to parents that the stakes are too high to allow drug abuse problems to be ignored. There will be a question-and-answer session at the end of the meeting. Refreshments will be served.

The symposium comes as the 30-member Quincy Drug Task Force works on a series of recommendations it plans to submit to Mayor Koch in coming months. The group is a collaboration of elected leaders, law enforcement officials, educators, addiction specialists, human service agencies and residents.

Since January, the city has enlisted its first-ever team of drug-sniffing dogs at the Police Department, conducted drug sweeps at city schools for the first time in years, increased anti-drug education in the city's high schools, and continues planning for a series of additional steps based on the recommendations of the task force.

"The Task Force has worked incredibly hard over the last several months, and I look forward to their recommendations," Koch said. "This is not a problem that is going to be solved overnight, but this group has already shown that it is a battle worth fighting."

Sweet Potato Bread

One of the easiest things to cook is a sweet potato, just pop it in the microwave for a few minutes and it's done. After this if I want a crusty skin it goes in a 400 degree oven until done.

Anyway I recently found a great recipe to use them and that is in a sweet potato bread. So easy and so delicious, it will be a nice addition for the upcoming holidays.

SWEET POTATO BREAD

- 1 3/4 cups flour
- 1 1/2 cups sugar
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1 teaspoon nutmeg
- 1/4 teaspoon cloves
- 2 eggs

- 1/1/2 cups mashed sweet potatoes (about 2 medium size)
- 1/2 cup vegetable oil
- 6 tablespoons orange juice
- 1/2 cup pecans

Combine the first eight ingredients in a large bowl. In another bowl, beat the eggs, sweet potato, oil and orange juice. Stir in the dry ingredients until moistened.

Fold in the pecans. Place in a greased baking pan, or a loaf pan. Bake in a 350 degree oven for about an hour or until toothpick inserted in the center comes out clean. Cool on a wire rack.

(When I made it, I used one cup of sugar instead because of the sweetness of the potato, but use whatever you prefer.)

Patrick Dunlea To Compete On Reality Show Quincy High School Grad Becomes Top Chef

Three years ago Patrick Dunlea was learning how to cook in the Quincy High School Culinary Arts program.

Today, Patrick is about to become a member of the "Top Chef" American reality competition show that airs on the cable television network Bravo, in which chefs compete against each other in weekly challenges. They are judged by professional chefs and other notables from the food and wine industry with the contestants being eliminated each week.

Dunlea is currently a student at the Culinary Institute of America. With an inherent love for cooking, he was inspired as a child by his mother and grandmother and today by food writer

Michael Pollan.

Dunlea has always had a love for the arts, both performing and visual and tries to incorporate them into every dish he creates. He was also a product of Quincy High's "Artistry" program where he performed in many plays and the chorus.

With ingredients as his medium of art, he is inspired by quality and freshness and enjoys making fresh vegetable dishes like succotash, pisto and ratatouille. He has a passion for sustainable agriculture and hopes to educate and promote local farmers and growers.

Dunlea will return to Quincy High School to celebrate the opening of its new restaurant in the new high school come February.

Harry Potter In Return To United Methodist Church

With a sweep of a magic wand from Ollivander's, the Quincy Community Methodist Church will become the Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry Saturday, Oct. 25, at 1 p.m.

It's the fourth annual Harry Potter Celebration, based on the best-selling books by J. K. Rowling, in which members and friends of the church assume the roles of some of the characters.

Tickets are $6 per person, $20 for a family of four. All children must be accompanied by an adult. Costumes are encouraged but not required. Reservations can be made by calling 617-773-6854.

Every year is different at the Harry Potter Celebration. Two years ago, the church built a maze and a Goblet of Fire. Last year's participants discovered they qualified for Dumbledore's Army.

Returning this year will be Hagrid, Professor Trelawney, Professor Sprout, Madame Maxime and Professor McGonagall among others.

"We will be repeating the things people enjoy," said Rev. Rd. Susan F. Jarek-Glidden, pastor of the church at 40 Beale St., across from the Wollaston MBTA station.

"There will be a representative from Ollivander's Wands, a Sorting Ceremony and a Great Feast. Quidditch will be played. Everything else will be brand new.

"We plan to offer 'classes' in Potions and Transfiguration, and we hope people will like the surprises we have planned.

"I can't emphasize enough how important it is for people to make their reservations soon. We've sold out every year."

Bay State Community Services To Honor Fr. Bill, George Burke

Bay State Community Services, Inc. (BSCS) will honor Rev. William McCarthy and attorney George Burke at its Best of Bay State - A Night of Comedy event Thursday Oct. 23 at Granite Links Golf Club located on Quarry Hills Drive in Quincy.

Rev. McCarthy, more affectionately known as Father Bill, has been a prominent figure in the City of Quincy for more than 30 years. Early on, Father Bill recognized the complex problem of substance abuse. In the 1970's, Father Bill served as a Board Member of the South Shore Council on Alcoholism, which later merged with Survival, Inc. and three other organizations to create Bay State Community Services.

Fr. Bill is best known for founding Father Bill's Place, an emergency shelter in Quincy, which after 25 years, has joined with the MainSpring Coalition of Brockton to become Father Bills & MainSpring. This partnership brings a new strength to the goal of ending homelessness and promoting self-sufficiency by giving food and shelter to over 2,000 individuals annually, finding safe and affordable housing and providing permanent housing and supportive services.

Over the years, Father Bill and BSCS have collaborated on a number of projects including sustaining the operation of an adolescent emergency shelter in Weymouth.

Burke has been active in civic and community causes for nearly 50 years. He has served in many elected offices, including Quincy city councillor and council president, state representative, and district attorney of Norfolk County. As district attorney he established pioneer drug education courses in Massachusetts schools and received numerous accolades for fighting drug abuse and crime.

Fr. Bill and Burke are recognizable names throughout the region and especially to those who call Quincy "home," said Ken Tarabelli, executive director of Bay State Community Services. "Our organization has been fortunate to benefit from the work of these gentlemen. Their vision, courage and dedication has helped us to understand the true meaning of community."

Best of Bay State - A Night of Comedy will begin at 6 p.m. with a welcome reception and silent auction, followed by dinner in the Grand Ballroom and The Best of Bay State Awards Ceremony. Entertainment will be provided throughout the evening by Boston's best comedians.

Tickets are $100 each and are available for purchase online at www.baystatecs.org. All proceeds from the event will benefit the agency in its ongoing efforts to provide programming for adults and children in need of social, mental health, addiction and correctional services.

Bay State Community Services, Inc. (BSCS) was founded in 1991 through the merger of five local, not-for-profit agencies, including Quincy-based Survival, Inc. and South Shore Council on Alcoholism. Today, throughout Southeastern Massachusetts BSCS offers a unique continuum of social, mental health, addiction and correctional services. For more information on Bay State Community Services, Inc., call (617) 471-8400 or log on to www.baystatecs.org.

Mayor's Golf Tournament Raises $70,000 For Heating Aid To Needy

Senior citizens and low-income families should be a little warmer this winter, thanks to the nearly $70,000 raised from various donors through the Mayor's Cup Charity Golf Tournament.

"It was a great day for the community, business, government and residents, to come together for something tremendously positive and I am incredibly thankful to all who participated," Mayor Thomas Koch said.

"This is going to be an especially difficult winter for many in our city, but I believe we have helped make a substantial difference through the generosity of so many in our community."

More than 140 golfers participated and nearly 100 local businesses provided donations for the event held at Granite Links Golf Club which donated the use of the course for the tournament.

City Council voted unanimously Monday to accept the gifts and to plan a meeting in several weeks to discuss disbursement of the funds.

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi noted the fuel assistance funds would be especially useful this year with local residents already feeling the fiscal crisis and having more difficulty making ends meet.

City Council President Jay Davis said the council would plan a meeting designed to inform eligible residents of programs handled through the city and Quincy Community Action Program (QCAP).

At their Sept. 22 meeting, councillors, also, accepted over $10,000 from various donors for other projects as follows

The Copeland Family Foundation donated $5,000 for the Quincy Animal Shelter.

State Street Bank donated $3,000 toward technology for the city's 911 center

Gifts totaling $1,510 were donated to DARE; the educational program designed to educate children to the dangers of drugs and alcohol.

Among the corporate sponsors who contributed as much as $5,000 for The Mayor's Cup were Daniel Quirk, Eastern Bank, Honeywell, State Street Bank, Tishman, Gilbane, National Grid, Verizon, South Cove Community Health Center, Boston Scientific, Street-Works and Capitol Waste.

FIREFIGHTER TOM GANNON, Mayor Thomas Koch, and Firefighters Tom Bowes and Andy Smith at the Mayor's Cup Charity Golf Tournament Monday.

Bayswater Boatyard Meeting Oct. 15

A meeting will be held Wednesday, Oct. 15 at 7 p.m. at the Houghs Neck Maritime Center, 137 Bayview Avenue to discuss the Bayswater Boatyard.

Representative from the Park & Recreation Board, Park Department and Law

Department will make a presentation, discuss the future use of the facility and field any questions raised by residents.

The boatyard, formerly privately owned by Thomas Place, was purchased for open space purposes by the city in 2005 and placed under the jurisdiction of the Park & Recreation Board this past May.

Call the Park Department at 617-376-1251 for more information.

FIRE SAFETY

Facts About Carbon Monoxide

I prepared a four-page fact sheet on carbon monoxide for a presentation I'll be giving soon. But I'd like to take this opportunity to pass along some information gathered for it here.

Carbon Monoxide (CO) is the number one cause of poisoning deaths in the United States. However, CO poisoning deaths have been on the decline. The reason given for the decline is the improvement in combustion devices, furnaces, motor vehicles, stoves, water heaters, etc.

Automobile incidents comprise 1/2 the non-fire CO incidents; idling vehicles are the cause of these incidents. 2/3 of all CO exposures occur in the home. CO exposures are not linked to sleeping, but are highly seasonal being more prevalent in the colder months when heating systems are used more frequently and idling vehicles are more common.

Fatalities over age 65 are double the rate of the general population (23% fatalities while 12% of the population). There are 2 to 3 times more deaths in males than females. CO production rates can be significantly increased by problems with combustion devices, furnaces, etc., when abnormal conditions of operation exist.

CO is treacherous where it is poisonous, colorless, odorless and tasteless. It is undetectable unless you have the appropriate alarmed device monitoring your in-house atmosphere. When inhaled, it enters the lungs where it competes with oxygen. It attaches to the hemoglobin in the blood 200 times faster than oxygen causing cells to die. Exposure can result in flu-like symptoms ranging from headaches, nausea, dizziness, confusion, fainting, unconsciousness and death.

Should you suspect an exposure to CO; get out of the house into fresh air; call your local fire department from a neighbor's house and seek medical attention.

Prevention consists of appropriately installed, working CO detectors on each habitable level of a dwelling including habitable portions of basements and attics. They must be present with ten feet of bedroom doors and within rooms containing approved unvented gas heaters.

In addition, have a qualified technician inspect appliances; check vents, flues and chimneys for blockages and leaks; do not use a gas oven to heat a home; don't leave vehicles running in a garage and never use a grill of hibachi in your home.

To help us from exposure, Gov. Mitt Romney signed "Nicole's Law" which took effect on March 31, 2006.

That law now mandates that every residential structure that contains fossil fuel burning equipment or has an enclosed garage shall now be equipped by the owner or landlord with working carbon monoxide alarm protection.

If you haven't done so already, please comply and install these detectors throughout your home. As usual, we are here to answer any questions you may have pertaining to their proper installation.

Be safe!

DiGuisepe said Tuesday, adding they will make "every effort to get this project in Quincy."

"All the studies suggest that the area can absorb the traffic," said DiGuisepe, adding that engineers can make changes to the nearby intersection.

As for the impact on Town Brook, DiGuisepe said there would be "no impact on Town Brook."

Both DiGuisepe and Davis cited the new jobs that the store would bring to the city.

"Jobs are being lost every day," Davis said, adding that B.J.'s would be a very positive thing for the city, especially as people try to save money in their budgets.

Davis believes the Planning Board was sending a message that the developer "needed to do more work, not that they were against the project."

Davis said he would be "extremely disappointed if this project dies."

tion of the Quincy Business Association's Harvest Festival in Quincy Center Saturday, Oct. 18.

Judges from the art and business communities will determine the winners of the special contest as well as choose the victors in a number of other categories.

Meanwhile, adults will have a contest of their own as Solus Salon in Quincy Center will judge makeup to hair styles, cut and/or color, to collect the names of applicants for a complete makeover later in November.

The winners will make their debuts fashionably dressed and newly coifed at a special presentation that will reveal the before and after.

School Fund Members Hope Taxpayers Will Be Generous

Property tax bills went out last week and School Committee Woman Jo-Ann Bragg hopes Quincy homeowners and business people can find a little extra cash to make a charitable contribution to the Quincy Education Fund along with their tax payment.

Bragg is a member of a committee, newly appointed by Mayor Thomas P. Koch to determine how to spend the money collected for the fund, which was established in 2003 to supplement the educational needs of the Quincy Public Schools.

In five years, taxpayers have contributed $31,000 to the fund, which has spent $18,000 on computer network printers and library or reference books at every public school in the city, leaving just under $13,000 in the fund that is maintained by the city auditor.

"We are hoping that even more funds will come it due to the city's recent mailing of property tax bills," said Bragg. "By making a charitable contribution to the fund, taxpayers who itemize on their income tax return will be able to claim a tax deduction."

"This is a win-win situation. It is good for our children, our educational system and taxpayers." The bills are due back at City Hall Nov. 1. The committee has scheduled a meeting in November to develop a spending plan.

In addition to Bragg, members of the Quincy Educational Fund Committee include:

School Supt. Dr. Richard DeCristofaro, Ward 3 City

Councillor Kevin Coughlin, Citywide Parents Council member Barbara Isola, Public School teacher Nancy Barron, and concerned parents and residents Grace Buscher and Michelle Lydon.

"We want to spend the money in a way that all schools will receive a benefit from the generosity of caring taxpayers," said Bragg.

The Superintendent plans to send out an email to principals requesting information on their needs and the committee will analyze the results.

"The goal is to address the school system's tangible needs as they are identified from the level where the rubber meets the road, in the schools and in the classrooms," said Coughlin.

Anyone wishing to donate with or without the middle section of their tax bills can send a check made payable to the Quincy Education Fund at Quincy City Hall, attn. Collector's Office, 1305 Hancock St., Quincy MA 02169.

Acclaimed String Orchestra To Perform At Eastern Nazarene College Oct. 16

The conductor-less string orchestra A Far Cry, one of Boston's most acclaimed new professional ensembles, will present a concert as part of Eastern Nazarene College's Musica Eclectica Concert Series Thursday, Oct. 16 at 7:30 p.m.

The concert will be held at the Wollaston Church of the Nazarene on the ENC campus, 37 East Elm Ave., Wollaston.

Student tickets are $5; senior citizens are $10, and general admission is $15. Tickets are available at the door.

Titled "Homage," the concert will include music by Mozart, Britten, Muffat, and modern master Arvo Part.

Recently profiled in a major article in The Boston Globe, A Far Cry has brought their energetic and musically sensitive performances to audiences across the country. A collectively-led 16-piece string orchestra, A Far Cry made its debut in May 2007 with a series of concerts that emphasized energy and enthusiasm as much as refinement and precision. Audience reaction was overwhelming.

Eastern Nazarene College is located at 23 East Elm Ave. in Quincy. More information may be found at www.afarcy.org, www.wconaz.org, www.enc.edu, and www.musica-eclectica.org, or by calling 617-745-3715.

FOOT NOTES

by Joel Chariton, D.P.M.
Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Surgery
Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Orthopedics

SURVEY SAYS: Half Of Us Suffer Foot Pain

It's unnecessary and excessively common. A recent survey conducted by the American Podiatric Medical Association (APMA) finds that 47% of Americans will experience a foot ailment in their lives. Nearly 1,700 men and women aged 18-60 responded to the APMA study. Results showed that almost 34% of respondents who suffered a foot ailment did nothing about it. For 19% of all respondents, foot pain had prevented or limited their ability to perform their normal daily activities. Looking at the older respondents, aged 51-60, 29% said foot pain limited their activities. About 49% of those with a foot ailment bought an over-the-counter product to relieve symptoms, while just 21% saw a podiatrist to diagnose and treat their condition.

The good news is that there is no reason to continue to suffer the pain caused by the many problems that can plague the feet. We turn to the most advanced treatment for problems of the foot and ankle, always with an understanding and compassionate approach. That's why so many adults, seniors, and children continue to seek our help whenever it is needed. For treatment for a full range of foot problems for patients of all ages, please call for an appointment at 781-986-3668, QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221. I am affiliated with the Brockton and Good Samaritan Hospitals.

P.S. The most common foot conditions respondents reported were sweaty feet, nail problems, pain in the ball of the foot, heel pain, and pain from shoes.

Beatty's staff. One will be a radio debate on WTKK on Oct. 14 with Jim Braude and Margery Eagan. The second debate, Oct. 28, will be televised on NECN. Details will be announced later.

Beatty has challenged Kerry's votes on major issues, such as Kerry's vote approving the War in Iraq, his vote approving an $85 billion federal loan to insurance giant, A.I.G., and his recent vote on the $830 to $850 million Wall Street bailout.

One of Beatty's major goals would be the reform of Congress and tougher rules on conflicts of interest.

Beatty believes that senators should not be voting on any issue "if you have a vested interest," such as stock or family connections.

"They don't recuse themselves," Beatty said that he, "got rid of stock. I don't want to owe anything to anybody except the voter."

By contrast, Beatty said selectmen and aldermen in Massachusetts must recuse themselves when issues affecting their finances or their family's finances arise.

Beatty has repeatedly charged that Kerry should not have voted on the A.I.G. issue because he, or a family member, has investments in A.I.G.

As a senator, Beatty said he would work for new rules requiring that senators not vote on items of personal financial interest.

As for the Wall Street bailout, Beatty would have demanded significant changes before voting his approval.

Beatty blasted the billion of dollars in so-called sweeteners that added $130 billion to the $700 billion bailout for an $830 billion total.

One such incentive, according to Beatty, is the multimillion-dollar "tax incentives for (Virgin Island) rum."

He called the so-called sweeteners, "more special interests."

He has other questions on the bailout.

"It's not strong enough when it comes to protecting taxpayers," Beatty said after last week's congressional vote approving the bailout. "You're talking about $7500 to $8500 (cost) to each household."

"Everybody's got a piece of this," said Beatty who said the bill should have included more substantial Congressional oversight of the distribution of the funds, reform of some 13 "alphabet" agencies which include HUD, as well as reforms in the senate and an investigation into "What went wrong?"

Beatty who is equally critical of Kerry's vote authorizing the Iraq War said that he'd received the same preliminary pre-war data given to Colin Powell before his United Nations presentation.

The information did not justify the war, according to Beatty who analyzed the intelligence using his own experience as a Counterterrorism Officer with the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

Now that the country is committed, Beatty said that America can't quit without winning and Kerry's quick exit plan is wrong.

"He was wrong about going in and he's wrong about getting out," Beatty said of Kerry. "We can not give them a victory. You have to have some sort of success to leave."

Beatty believes Senator Ted Kennedy has brought federal funds to the state, but that Kerry has not. He, also, has praise for his former opponent, Congressman William Delahunt.

Four years ago, Beatty challenged Delahunt for the 10th Congressional seat. He said he learned a lot from that six month campaign, and one lesson was that six months is too short for any campaign.

He, also, said he has even more respect for Delahunt because he voted against the bailout.

Beatty knows he has an uphill fight in the next 30 days just to break Kerry's predicted winning margin of 70 percent in the last senate election.

However, statistics indicate the state's voter profile has changed dramatically in recent years.

At this time, the number of registered Independents at 51 percent outnumber the combined total of both parties with 37 percent listed as Democrats and 12 percent registered Republicans.

Beatty's used to tough odds. He served as a Delta Force Assault Troop Commander and Operations Officer. He was awarded the Purple Heart and Combat Infantry Badge.

In addition, Beatty served as Special Agent for the FBI and as a CIA operations officer at the Counterterrorism Center

Subsequently, he founded and operated a successful security company, Total Security, US. His clients include the Pentagon, the Superbowl, the World Trade Center and the Statue of Liberty, as well as consultations with officials in major cities and for special events such as the Rose Bowl.

City Republicans To Meet Oct. 14

Protect Your Home From Rising Energy Costs

(ARA) - Home heating costs are expected to make double-digit leaps this winter, according to the U.S. Department of Energy. Residential oil prices during the upcoming home heating season are expected to increase 31 percent over last year and consumers this year will likely pay an average of $2,644. Natural gas customers also are expected to see significant price increases -- about 22 percent over last year with an average cost of $1.059.

With high winter heating bills in the forecast, many homeowners are investing in home improvements that can help save them money by reducing their demand for home heating fuel and their home's overall energy consumption.

Windows can play a large role in a home's annual heating budget. Poor performing windows can account for up to 40 percent of a home's heat loss during the winter.

With today's high cost of energy, that's money going right out the window.

Paul Delahunt, president of Renewal by Andersen, says replacing old, leaky windows with new, energy-efficient windows can have a big impact on helping reduce your energy bills -- making today the perfect time to tackle that window replacement project you've been thinking about.

Choosing energy efficient windows

Because windows have an impact on both heat loss and heat gain, your decision on what type of windows to buy will be among the most important decisions you will make in terms of energy use. Delahunt offers advice for choosing the most energy efficient replacement windows:

* Look for the ENERGY STAR label. Products with the ENERGY STAR label can help you achieve substantial savings on heating and cooling costs.

* Invest in windows with Low-E glass. The state-of-the-art transparent metallic films in Low-E glass regulate and optimize the amount of heat and sunlight that is allowed inside a home - helping to increase energy efficiency.

* Look for the National Fenestration Rating Council (NFRC) label. It means the window's performance is certified and provides an "apples-to-apples" comparison between products.

* Check the U-Factor. A window with a lower U-Factor has better insulation properties - in colder climates, a factor of 0.35 or lower is recommended.

* Make sure windows are properly installed to provide long-term energy efficiency.

According to Delahunt, every Renewal by Andersen window comes standard with High-Performance Low-E4 glass which is over 14 percent more energy efficient than stringent ENERGY STAR requirements, reducing your energy bills by up to 25 percent over standard dual pane glass.

Energy efficient windows -- Helping to achieve a better environment

Energy efficiency has long been a concern for homeowners. But as energy prices rise and environmental issues intensify, Delahunt says more homeowners than ever are seeking windows that will help achieve both energy efficiency and comfort in the home, while protecting their families and the environment.

Homeowners considering home improvement projects are increasingly interested in ensuring the products they install don't degrade the indoor air quality of their home.

Some building materials can release toxins into the air through evaporation -- a process called off-gassing. This off-gassing can continue for years after the products are initially installed which means you continue to breathe these chemicals as you live and sleep in your home.

Redecorating And Keeping It Green

(ARA) - The redecorating bug has bitten you hard, and you want to join the "green" society by making your home stylish but healthy and environmentally friendly.

You can start from the floor up, and environmentally-friendly decorative flooring is just what you need. Something that allows you to choose from many colors, have simple installation and follow up with easy maintenance. Materials like sustainably harvested hardwoods and ceramic tile aren't your only eco-friendly choices. A better option might be Marmoleum Click, an all-natural flooring made from linseed oil, wood floor, rosin and limestone.

With a visit to www.the-marmoleumstore.com, you can match colors, look at decorative designs already created or plan out your own. "Previously, linoleum was available only in large sheets and generally required professional installation," says Scott Day of Forbo Flooring, manufacturers of Marmoleum and Marmoleum Click products. "But Marmoleum Click makes installing a simple linoleum floor -- or even a complex design -- very easy." The product is available in 12-inch by 36-inch panels or 12-inch by 12-inch squares. The panels click together, much like most other floating floors, to create a durable, attractive surface.

Here are some considerations to keep in mind when creating fashionable designs for the floor in a room:

* Room size and shape.

A dark color or busy pattern may not suit a small or long, narrow room, because it may make the room look smaller. Stripes or diagonal patterns, however, can create optical effects that completely transform a room.

* Function.

A living room or bedroom often lends itself to darker, warmer colors, whereas a clean, crisp environment may be more appropriate for a kitchen.

* Furniture.

The more furniture there is in a room, the smaller the floor area that is visible, so a simpler pattern is often the best choice. Amazing effects can be achieved by a well chosen pattern.

After the floor is finished, you can move onto furniture. Some green ideas are to reuse your current pieces that are solid in construction. A new color of paint, slipcovers, reupholstering or adding decorative furnishings can give the room an entirely new look without throwing anything away. If your furniture can't be saved, look into garage sales for used pieces that have simple, traditional lines which won't look dated in a short period of time. Also, look for furniture built from natural products and using stains or paints with limited environmental hazard.

When it's time to tackle the walls, look for paints that contain little or no volatile organic compounds. Latex- and water-based paints with a flat finish typically fit into this category. These paints provide little to no chemical leakage from the walls to the air as the paint is applied and dries, keeping the air inside your home cleaner.

If you have a redecorating project planned, it's not hard to keep the project green and environmentally friendly.

Friend of the Family

by Tracy, Ed and Bruno

Our CENTURY 21 Annex Realty agent John Balzano sold our house in Braintree in two days! He then helped us find our new home and we couldn't be happier. A long time friend of the family, John understood exactly what we were looking for. He weeded out the homes he knew we wouldn't be interested in, saving us time in our search.

REPRESENTATIVES OF South Suburban Oncology Center David Murphy, Oncology Marketing Manager, (far left), H. Joseph Barthold, MD, Medical Director, (2nd from right) and Karen Donnellan, Administrative Director (far right), are hoping that their donation of a portable sleeper chair to Quincy Medical Center will encourage others to follow suit. On hand to accept the new chair are QMC staff members Susan Neagle-Levy, RN, Med/Surgical Clinical Manager, Laura Klint, RPh, John Loughnane, MD, and Thomas Fitzgerald, MD.

South Suburban Oncology Center Donates Sleeper Chair For QMC Patient Families

For some patients, having loved ones close by during their hospitalization gives them the extra peace of mind they need to recover more quickly. For family members, however, spending the night sitting in a bedside chair can be less than comfortable. That's the feedback Quincy Medical Center's (QMC) Pain Management Task Force/Compassion in Action Program heard from patients. And now thanks to a generous donation from South Suburban Oncology Center (SSOC), patient family members will have a more comfortable place to stay when needed.

SSOC donated to the A-6 nursing unit a new portable, fold-out sleeper chair that can easily be wheeled from room to room and enables an individual to stretch out and sleep more comfortably.

"Having an amenity like this available for family members is something that our patients will really appreciate," said John Loughnane, MD, a hospitalist at QMC.

"When patients are able to have someone with them in the hospital, it can have a positive effect on their recovery," agreed Thomas Fitzgerald, MD, QMC surgeon and vice president of the medical staff. "We are very grateful to our friends at South Suburban Oncology Center for recognizing this need and providing this comfortable option for our patients and their families."

South Suburban Oncology Center is a joint venture partnership with Shields

Health Care Group, Quincy Medical Center, South Shore Hospital and Mass General Hospital. SSOC offers leading edge radiation therapy treatment options in their easy-to-access Quincy location. In addition, SSOC is one of only a handful of facilities in Massachusetts that is accredited by the American College of Radiology (ACR).

emony Friday featured a short speaking program that included Ian Bowles, Secretary of the state's Executive Office of Energy and Environmental Affairs, Mayor Koch, Rheeta Wise of MFS and Tod Brainard, principal of Griffith Properties.

"We are happy to celebrate the completion of HarborSouth, welcome MFS as our first tenant and are extremely excited about the sustainability milestone that this project is pursuing," said Brainard, Principal at Griffith Properties. "HarborSouth's sustainable features, combination of energy-efficient and natural lighting, as well as superior indoor air quality will increase the health and productivity for our tenants and their employees."

"I congratulate Griffith Properties on the opening of this innovative LEED-certified building, with features that will significantly reduce energy consumption while encouraging building employees to make use of alternative transportation, carpools and fuel efficient cars," said Energy and Environmental Secretary Ian Bowles. "Gov. Patrick intends to make Massachusetts the nation's leader in clean energy and green development, and projects such as this place us closer to that goal."

HarborSouth Tower was acquired by Griffith in 2007 and features a new lobby, new windows, an upgraded façade, new HVAC systems, a new multi-level parking deck and an amenity package featuring a café, fitness center and shared conference facility as a result of the renovations.

A Job Well Done

On Sept. 26, 2008, at approximately 12:10 A.M., Officer Jay Borden had just completed his shift and was on his way home in his own vehicle when he observed a large disorder in the middle of Washington Street at Cagney's Pub. As he got closer, Officer Borden observed two males kicking another male who was curled up on the ground attempting to protect him. A large group of females were also fighting with each other. The Officer immediately pulled off to the side of the road, and radioed for cruisers to respond to his location.

Officer Borden then got out of his car and yelled "Quincy Police - Stop kicking him", The group ceased fighting and everyone began to disperse, but the Officer was able to detain one of the male suspects who was kicking the male on the ground. The other suspect took off running down Washington Street toward McGrath Highway. An ambulance was called for the male victim who was still on the ground. At this time officers arrived on scene and the suspect was placed under arrest.

As Fallon Ambulance Paramedics tended to the victim, Officer Borden interviewed one of the females at the scene. She said that she was across the street from the bar when some females and the suspect started yelling at her. She said that she walked toward the group and a fight broke out with the females. She was immediately punched in the face by suspect #1. She said that another male (suspect #2) came to her rescue and punched suspect #1 to the ground. Another unknown suspect joined in kicking suspect #1. Both victims refused medical treatment.

Officer Borden then questioned the suspect #2, who said that he was walking home when he was "jumped by four dudes." When asked what provoked the fight, the suspect said, "I don't know - they just jumped me." When asked if there was any verbal exchange or any incidents prior to the fight, the suspect reiterated, "no, they just jumped me". The suspect had minor cuts, bleeding, and scrapes on his face but refused medical treatment.

Officer Borden then interrogated suspect #1, the kicker, who waived his Miranda rights and stated that there was a verbal altercation, which led into a physical altercation between a group of girls. He stated that he then saw suspect #2 get involved and punch the female in the face. He stated that he jumped in to help her and that was all that happened. When asked who the other male was that kicked the male on the ground, the suspect said, "I have no idea what you're talking about". Suspect #1 a 24 year old Quincy resident was charged with "Assault and Battery with a Dangerous Weapon (Shod Foot) and then transported to the police station. The suspect's sneakers were taken as evidence. A complaint application will be filed against suspect #1 for "Assault and Battery" for punching the female in the face.

Nice Work!

Presidents Pick Up Second Win

By SEAN BRENNAN

The Quincy Presidents (2-2 overall, 1-0 in Patriot League play) picked up their second victory of the season last Friday night against Rockland High School with a 7-6 win, but the final result was not as cut-and-dry as the score may indicate.

Leading 7-0, courtesy of a fourth quarter 35-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Lance Peterson to wide receiver Anthony Raddatz (Quincy's own version of Randy Moss), with under five minutes to play in the game, Rockland proceeded to drive down the field and score on a three-yard run from Jeff Reardon to put the score at 7-6 Presidents.

Now here is where things entered into the bizarre.

On the ensuing point after attempt (PAT) by the Bulldogs, Quincy's senior linebacker EJ Louis broke through the line and blocked the kick. The loose ball was picked up by the Bulldogs' holder who then completed a pass to an offensive lineman for a two-point conversion and an 8-7 advantage.

Not so fast.

According to the rules, since the Rockland player that caught the ball was an ineligible receiver the yellow flags were thrown. But for some reason the referees gave Quincy the option of accepting the penalty or declining it. Quincy obviously accepted the penalty-declining it would have given two points to the Bulldogs and Rockland was forced to try another PAT from five yards back. The Bulldogs went for the win, but on the two-point conversion pass, Quincy defensive back Kenny Nguyen forced the receiver to catch the ball out-of-bounds. The Presidents took the ball back on offense after senior Bryan McGee recovered the on-side kick and Quincy ran out the clock for the victory.

"It was a dog-fight the entire game," said head coach Bill Reardon. "We dominated the time of possession the whole game, but just couldn't score until the fourth quarter. Up until that final Rockland possession they could do nothing offensively against us, but they did finally score setting up that crazy ending."

"On the PAT try, EJ Louis made a great play to block the kick and once they completed the pass to that ineligible receiver we thought the play was dead. But it wasn't and we had to bear down, which we did. Nice win."

Quincy had numerous scoring chances throughout the first three quarters of play, but just could not get the ball in the end zone when it counted until Peterson connected with Raddatz in the fourth quarter. On two of their first three offensive possessions, the Presidents, behind the signal calling of an ever-improving Peterson, drove the ball inside the Rockland five-yard line; coming up empty on both drives.

"We had several chances to put some points on the board early, but could not finish what we had started," said Reardon. "Twice we were inside their five-yard line but couldn't get it done. We were looking to score touchdowns and just couldn't connect until the fourth. But it was a big league win no matter the score."

This one-point victory not only gives Quincy an all-important Patriot League win, but also helps to take some of the sting out of the two losses they have had this fall (28-27 to Cohasset and 8-7 to Canton).

"There must be something about us and one-point games," added Reardon. "We have had two tough one-point losses, so this win was big. We are two points away from being 4-0 this year."

After picking up their first victory of the year on Sept. 19 with a 12-7 non-league win over Plymouth South, Quincy spent the week of Sept. 26 on a bye giving the coaching staff and Reardon time to work on some things in preparation for the game against Rockland.

"The extra week of rest gave myself and my coaching staff some time to add in a couple of new plays on offense, work on our special teams and strengthen our defense. The kids practiced hard and it worked out well against Rockland."

The Presidents are going to need to put into action that extra practice this weekend when they play host to EMass football powerhouse Duxbury High School (Saturday, 2 p.m., Veterans Memorial Stadium). The Dragons (4-0) are coming off an impressive 35-6 win over Hanover HS and have a stacked and deep roster.

"Duxbury is as good of a team that I have seen in years," said Reardon. "We are going to have to play our best football to have a chance against them, but if we stay within the game plan we should be able to stay in the game."

The game against the Dragons starts a five-game swing for Quincy against members of the Patriot League's Keenan Division. The Presidents play Duxbury, Whitman-Hanson (Oct. 17), Silver Lake (Oct. 25), Scituate (Oct. 31) and Hingham (Nov. 7) before ending the season on Thanksgiving versus North Quincy.

Red Raiders Ring Up Third Straight Victory

By SEAN BRENNAN

If the last 12 quarters (three games) are any indication of the things that have yet to happen this season for the North Quincy Red Raider football team, all future challengers best bring their 'A' game to the table.

North Quincy (3-1 overall, 1-1 in the Patriot League) steamrolled Whitman-Hanson High 21-0 last Friday evening at Veterans Memorial Stadium; the team's third straight victory and their third consecutive top-notch performance.

Including the games against non-league opponents Sharon High School (28-0) and Plymouth South High School (12-7) and last Friday night's win over W-H, North Quincy has allowed just one (not a misprint) offensive touchdown in the last twelve quarters of football.

That is some serious defensive domination.

"In general, the whole defense has been flying around the ball; eleven hats on the ball carrier at all times," said NQ head coach Jim Connor. "We are doing the little things right on defense and we have been great at getting multiple defenders to converge on each play."

"But the most encouraging thing is that we are winning the turnover battle (NQ holds a +8 advantage over the last three games-10 opposing turnovers to just two for the Raiders) and that means that we are giving our offense more chances to score."

"Winning breeds confidence and that is what we are seeing with our defense

the last three games."

And, as an added bonus, the offense-especially the running game hasn't been that shabby, either.

Against the Panthers, North Quincy jumped out to an early 14-0 first quarter lead on touchdown runs from Brian Donaghey (four-yard TD) and Joe Vialpando (22-yard TD), held W-H scoreless throughout all four quarters, and finished it off with another touchdown run from Patrick Watkins in the fourth quarter. Final score: 21-0.

Vialpando and Watkins combined for 189 yards on 32 carries and two touchdowns, lifting the Raiders to its best start in years. These two stars also contributed on defense with a combined three interceptions-two by Vialpando and one by Watkins.

"Like the defense, our running game is feeding off what each of them are accomplishing individually on the field," added Connor. "We have some serious depth at that position with Watkins, Vialpando, Terrance Staley and Matt Jay at fullback and Donaghey at fullback and they all balance each other very well."

"Watkins, Vialpando and Donaghey have all been getting similar-carries in game play and it helps to keep them all fresh and productive. It also allows us to maintain ball control and keep our drives moving in the positive direction."

"In high school football, if a team can hold possession of the ball for 15-plays it helps the defense as much as the offense and that is what we are seeing these last three games."

With six Patriot League games still to be played and their non-league schedule finished, the Raiders are in a great position to make a major splash in their inaugural season in the new league.

North Quincy, which is in the Fisher Division of the Patriot League (the league is divided into the Fisher and Keenan Divisions), plays five of its final six games against Fisher Division foes with their final game of the year against Quincy on Thanksgiving. And with the way that the schedule is set up and with the dominant way North Quincy is playing football at the moment, the Raiders are now serious contenders for a first-place finish in the Fisher Division.

"Our confidence is pretty good at the moment but my job is to try and stay grounded as we move into our league schedule," said Connor. "If we continue to do what we have been doing that would be great, but good teams are always trying to get better."

"We have a 1-1 record in the Patriot League, which is just average, but we are going in the right direction. The time is now to prove ourselves as a contender."

The next five games against Pembroke (Oct. 11), Rockland (Oct. 17), Hanover (Oct. 24), Randolph (Oct. 30) and Middleboro (Nov. 7)-all Fisher Division opponents-will go a long way in deciding just how good of a team this 2008 North Quincy edition really is.

No matter what happens over the final two months of the season, success and a winning tradition has now become a staple of a program that just two seasons ago struggled through a 1-10 campaign. North Quincy High School football is back in a big way.

"This is a great group of kids," said Connor, "and so far we have not had to deal with issues that could hurt our team. But it takes a great staff, the support of the North Quincy community and good players to be a good team. And that is what we are working on building."

"We can't look ahead. Our focus this week will be solely on Pembroke. One game at a time."

The Raiders will travel to Pembroke High School on Saturday to play a 1 p.m. game.

Red Raiders Post 0-2-1 Record

A lack of scoring may become the crux for the North Quincy Red Raider girls' soccer team in their quest for another post-season appearance.

After dropping a 4-0 game to Duxbury High School on Oct. 6, a 6-0 game to Whitman-Hanson High School on Oct. 2 and playing to a 0-0 draw on Sept. 30 against Malden High School, North Quincy is facing an uphill battle to reach the necessary .500 record they would need to advance to the state tournament.

At 3-5-2 overall and 3-4-1 in the Patriot League, the Raiders need to pick up points in their final nine games to have that chance. The team plays four crucial league games against Hingham (today, 3:45 p.m., Teal Field), Pembroke (Oct. 10), Hanover (Oct. 14) and Randolph (Oct. 16) in the next eight days and needs to win at least two of those four games to stay in the hunt.

"We are having a hard time putting the ball in the net," said NQ head coach Paul Bregoli. "The team has been playing hard, but we have missed several scoring opportunities the last few games that could have changed the course of those games."

GIRLS' SOCCER

Against Duxbury, the Red Raiders feel behind 1-0 ten minutes into the first half and were down 2-0 at the halftime break. Two prominent first half scoring chances went by the books for North Quincy and the Dragons put the game on ice with two more goals in the second half.

"They scored early. We were not ready to play the game at the start and it cost us," added Bregoli. "But we had those two chances to pull even in the opening half but just could not finish."

On top of dropping a tough game, North Quincy lost its leading scorer, junior forward Cara Murtagh, to a dislocated shoulder. Murtagh, who leads the team with five goals, is expected to miss several games recovering from her injury.

"We played them aggressively and tough," said Bregoli, "but losing Cara hurt our offense. We are going to need someone else to step up while she is out."

Bregoli singled out the play of seniors Jess Howlett, Amy Carchedi, junior Sammi Bonanni, sophomore Jillian Carchedi and freshman Jonlyn Lydon against Duxbury.

Last week the Raiders traveled down to W-H to play against a potential state finalist in the Panthers. By halftime the score was 5-0.

"Whitman-Hanson is one of the best teams in Massachusetts," said Bregoli. "They score 20 seconds into the game and led by five goals at the half. We were on our heels playing defense the whole game. That is a really good team."

Howlett, playing in goal for senior Siobhan Carnell, made 15 saves in the losing effort. Others playing well for North Quincy included Shannon Coleman, Devon McKay, Brittany Folkins and Maria DiPietro.

The team played Malden HS to a 0-0 draw in a non-league game early last week. NQ had several scoring chances, including a shot by Kaleen Campo that hit the post.

"We has so many chances and could not score," said Bregoli. "But even after our 0-2-1 week, we are still in the hunt for a post-season berth."

The Raiders host Pembroke on Friday at 3:30 p.m. at Teal Field.

Answers To Common Questions About Colonoscopies

By Kenneth Harris, M.D., Medical Director of Endoscopy, Milton Hospital

If you could prevent a life-threatening disease by taking a few hours out of your day, would you do it? Thanks to Katie Couric, millions of Americans are familiar with the term "colonoscopy" but still, many people have questions about the procedure and overall colon health.

Let's start out with a few statistics. Colon cancer is the nation's third most common cancer and five percent of the population will be diagnosed with colon cancer. Ninety percent of colon cancer cases occur in patients over 50-years-old and if detected early, colon cancer is curable. If this is true, then why are only 57 percent of at-risk people getting colonoscopies?

Historically, there has always been some fear and apprehension among patients surrounding the word "colonoscopy." Perhaps a few answers to the questions that many have will build a strong case for the importance of proactively screening for colon cancer.

Why should I get a colonoscopy and when should I get one?

Colonoscopies are exploratory procedures used for diagnosing cancer, polyps and other diseases of the colon including diverticulitis, colitis and Crohn's disease. The procedure examines the colon with a fiber optic camera on a flexible tube passed through the anus. During the procedure, a physician has an opportunity to remove polyps, biopsy suspicious areas and cauterize bleeding sites. A polyp is extra tissue that grows inside your colon and sometimes develops into cancer. When removed, polyps are analyzed by a pathologist to determine if there are any cancerous cells. It takes anywhere from 8-10 years for a polyp to develop into cancer, therefore supporting the necessity for regular screenings.

Both males and females over the age of 50 should have a colonoscopy to screen for cancer and a follow-up colonoscopy every 10 years, unless otherwise specified by your doctor. If there is a history of colon cancer in your family or if you have had a polyps or cancer before, the frequency and age for having the procedure may change. And, as a rule of thumb, if someone in your family has been diagnosed with colon cancer at a young age, your first colonoscopy should be ten years prior to the age they were diagnosed.

I don't want to drink that!

In the past, many patients disliked the idea of drinking the preparatory liquids used to clean out their colon prior to the procedure, due to the large quantity of liquid along with the sometimes "displeasurable" taste. Fortunately, there are now pills that a patient can take along with a 24-hour diet of clear fluids only that will adequately prepare the colon for the procedure. Drinking the liquids is still the method of choice for most doctors, as it does the best job, however if needed, pills are an option. As with any procedure, it is important to communicate with your physician and make sure they are aware of any concerns you may have so they can best create a treatment plan for you.

Will I be completely knocked out? Will I have to take off time from work?

Patients are sedated for the entire colonoscopy and generally have no recollection of the procedure. Conscious sedation, commonly used for dental procedures, is very similar to the sedation used for colonoscopies. This means that you will not be intubated and will not experience any of the adverse side effects from general anesthesia. The procedure itself takes approximately 15-20 minutes and afterwards, patients typically spend one hour in the recovery room. Patients should not work or drive the day of the procedure, but rather relax comfortably at home.

How can I proactively keep my colon healthy?

There are a few simple steps to keep your colon and digestive track working properly. It is important to drink lots of water, and have a diet high in fiber and low in fat. Additionally, a lifestyle free of smoking with plenty of exercise is essential.

Over the past few years, there has been an increase in colon health awareness and significant advances in technology. At Milton Hospital, we recently opened our new Endoscopy Center that doubled our patient capacity and updated our equipment to high definition scopes and monitors ensuring thorough and accurate procedures.

Colon health should be taken seriously. When colon cancer is discovered in early stages, patients have a 90 percent survival rate, compared to a 10 percent survival rate if the cancer is discovered in a later stage and has begun spreading to other organs. It is important to keep open communication with your primary care physician about colon health while taking all of the necessary precautions.

Kenneth Harris, M.D. has been the Medical Director of Endoscopy at Milton Hospital for the past 15 years.

Personal Training With a Friend

Q. My best friend recently started working with a personal trainer and has asked me to work out in a group with her and another friend. The personal training group would meet twice a week. I am a little worried that I am not as fit as the other two members of the group. Could everyone get an effective workout in a group setting even if we're on different fitness levels?

A. Group personal training is one of the biggest trends in the fitness industry today. The idea of receiving the expertise of a personal trainer but in a group setting has made this one of the most popular types of training at many fitness facilities. The benefits of group training are appealing to many who want to use a personal trainer and also enjoy the camaraderie of workout partners.

Most group personal training sessions begin with the assessment of individual participants to establish their personal fitness goals and to discuss your health and fitness history.

Group personal training and group exercise classes differ in the approach to the group's purpose and the individual programming. Your personal trainer will be able to pace everyone in the group to work at their own fitness level by modifying exercises as necessary.

There are several benefits to group personal training, including a reduced cost by working out with another participant, the support and encouragement you can receive and give with other participants, accountability from your workout buddies, a professional trainer monitoring your workouts and assessing your goals, and a fun but productive workout environment.

Your personal trainer will be able to identify each individual's needs and then program workouts for their benefit. Discuss your concerns with the trainer, and he or she will design a workout that will safely challenge each person without going beyond their fitness level. Remember the goal is for each participant to succeed.

Although group training has its advantages, it is not for everyone. A true novice to exercise may not feel comfortable in a group and may opt for true one-on-one personal training. Also, your personal trainer should only place participants together who can work well with one another and create a positive environment for everyone involved.

Remember that while group personal training can be a great way to become fit, it is important to find the type of training that will work best for you and help you reach your fitness goals.

Always consult a physician before beginning an exercise program. If you have a fitness or training question, write to Andrea in care of King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Clean Hands And Desks Keep Kids In School

(ARA) - Nearly 22 million school days are lost each year due to illness, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. But a new study from researchers at Children's Hospital Boston, published in "Pediatrics," found that simple steps like disinfecting surfaces and using alcohol-based hand sanitizers helped reduce student absenteeism rates in elementary schools.

"It is critical to prevent exposure to certain bacteria and viruses that can cause illness and make children miss school. Our research shows that elementary schools should consider infection control practices to help keep schools healthier," says Thomas Sandora, MD, MPH, a pediatric infection control specialist at Children's Hospital Boston.

The study, led by Dr. Sandora, involved 285 third and fifth-grade students in Avon, Ohio. Teachers in intervention classrooms used disinfecting wipes on surfaces such as desks, and students and teachers used hand sanitizer at key points throughout the school day. Other classrooms followed normal hand washing and cleaning procedures. Over eight weeks, researchers tracked the frequency and reasons for student absences. Investigators also compared the presence of viruses and total bacterial counts on several classroom surfaces.

The researchers found that absenteeism rates for gastrointestinal (GI) illnesses were 9 percent lower in classrooms that disinfected surfaces and used hand sanitizers. Respiratory illnesses were not affected by the infection control measures.

The study suggests that schools should consider adopting simple infection control practices, including disinfecting common surfaces and using alcohol-based hand sanitizers in classrooms to reduce the number of school days lost to common GI illnesses, which can cause nausea, vomiting and diarrhea.

Study funding, hand sanitizer and disinfecting wipes were provided by The Clorox Company.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustin, D.M.D.

THE MOST NATURAL REPLACEMENT OPTION

It is estimated that more than two-thirds of adults between the ages of 35 and 44 have lost at least one permanent tooth to an accident, decay, or gum disease. Thirty years ago, the only option for these people and others with missing permanent teeth would have been a fixed bridge or removable denture to replace the missing tooth (or teeth). More recently, however, dental implants are fast becoming the best tooth-replacement option for most individuals. Unlike fixed bridges, which attach to adjacent teeth, and dentures, which rest on the gums, dental implants are rooted directly into the jawbone. As such, they function like a natural tooth root to firmly anchor the replacement crown permanently in place.

Dental implants are extremely strong, stable and durable. Dental implants are secure so you can speak and eat with confidence! In fact, with proper maintenance they can last a lifetime. You know that your confidence about your teeth affects how you feel about yourself, both personally and professionally. We provide a wide range of innovative dental services specifically tailored to the needs and wants of our patients. Ultimately, you manage your own oral health, so call 617-479-8220 for an appointment. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where our focus is on you and what you expect from dentistry. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Dental implants discourage the bone loss that otherwise accompanies the loss of a permanent tooth.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) A relationship takes an unexpected shift that could leave you puzzled and hurt. Asking for an explanation could help uncover the reason for this sudden turn of events.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Your busy schedule has drawn down much of your energy levels. Restore them by spending a well-earned time out enjoying the arts — perhaps with that special someone.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Make that presentation with confidence. Remember: When you show you believe in yourself, it helps persuade others that you truly know what you're doing.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Although you usually prefer doing things on your own, a group effort might be advisable at this time. Try to keep an open mind about suggestions from colleagues.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) This could be a good time to reassess some of your recent decisions and see if any adjustments should be made based on facts that you might have just uncovered.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) An emotionally charged situation creates uncertainty about the future of your relationship. Best advice: Talk things out while there's still time to reach a new understanding.

BORN THIS WEEK: You tend to act on matters of principle despite what others might advise.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

"Whatever you do, you need courage. Whatever course you decide upon, there is always someone to tell you you are wrong. There are always difficulties arising which tempt you to believe that your critics are right. To map a course of action and follow it to an end, requires some of the same courage which a soldier needs. Peace has its victories, but it takes brave men to win them." - Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Each of us, as we go through life, strives to be a winner in our way. But it takes courage to be a winner, a winner at responding to life. It takes courage to accept friendship and intimacy with other persons. It takes courage to take a stand in an unpopular cause. It takes courage to choose reality over approval. It takes courage to accept the responsibility for your own choices and dare to be yourself. New ways are often uncertain ways and as Robert Frost expressed it: "Courage is the human virtue that counts most - courage to act on limited knowledge and insufficient evidence. That's all any of us have."

The great thing about courage is that, when we get the hang of it, it becomes character. And character, after all, is the referee of our success as a human being...

Over 800 Receive Copies Of New Book

Firefighters Bring Safety Lessons To First Graders

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Firefighters carried strong warnings in a soft-covered book to the city's more than 800 first graders last week and early this week.

Firefighters from each of the city's fire stations visited classrooms in the city's 11 public schools and three parochial schools and gave each student a copy of the book, Safe At Home, written just for them.

Six-year-old Jake and his over-stuffed brown bear, Teddy, are the heroes of the book.

"The boy is actually teaching the bear the dangers in the house," said Ernie Arienti, President of the Quincy Firefighters Association and brother of the author, Firefighter Bill Arienti.

The story is in language that children understand as written by Bill Arienti who has authored several other children's books in the past. He previously served as president of the union.

Another firefighter, Chris Melchin illustrated the book with full color pictures of a smiling Jake on his sixth birthday and the bear Teddy whose rolling eyes offer strong warnings of danger.

The pair warns of the dangers of touching stoves, electrical outlets, pushing screens, or getting too near open fires.

"The Quincy Firefighters Association, Local 792, wanted to do something to educate the children on the dangers and hazards in the home," said Ernie Arienti of his membership.

Arienti, the author, and Melchin, the illustrator,

FIRST GRADE STUDENTS at Lincoln Hancock School sit with author Bill Arienti and illustrator Chris Melchin, both firefighters, after discussing their book, Safe At Home, with the youngsters. Firefighters from each stationhouse read the book and gave a free copy to all first graders in the city's 11 public school and three parochial schools. The firefighters union published the book.

donated their skills for the project and Local 792 paid the publishing costs.

The book has references naming Quincy but those references can easily be changed for another city or town, according to the author.

"The book not only helps children to read, it also teaches them the dangers in the house and to be teachers to their younger siblings," said Ernie Arienti.

"They really enjoyed it," Ernie Arienti said of his visit to the Lincoln Hancock Elementary School where the author and Melchin read to the children.

Dozens of youngsters raised their hands, asking questions and volunteering their own safety tips from home such as wearing oven mits for the stove and finding a safe place for evacuation.

Melchin has created illustrations and paintings for the fire station and Bill Arienti has written and published previous books for his self-published children's series, Tales From Faxon Park.

The author has, also, taught elementary school writing classes in Quincy, Weymouth and Taunton.

Arienti calls writing, "a lost art," and tells youngsters and adults their greatest gift to another could be a story relating their own history, describing a place or an event.

"You can put so much more down in words," the author said.

JAKE AND TEDDY are the major characters in Safe At Home, a book offering safety tips to youngsters. Author Bill Arienti and illustrator Chris Melchin, both firefighters, donated their talents and the firefighters union published the book.

These red, white and blue quilt are just a few of the 108 quilts collected for American soldiers by Pat Fey of Quilters' Compass who expects to present 200 quilts to Soldiers' Angels this week. Person Of Interest Held For Evaluation Victim Churches Taking Steps Against Looting

By TOM HENSHAW

While the person of interest in ecumenical burglaries at eight Quincy churches, both Catholic and Protestant, was being evaluated at Bridgewater State Hospital, local clerics were busy shoring up their defenses against such crimes.

Leon Hatfield, 44, the homeless man who allegedly stole a car owned by the Rev. Mary Louise Gifford, pastor of the Wollaston Congregational Church, while she was preaching "Thou Shalt Not Steal," was arrested by Boston police on outstanding warrants.

Hatfield was ordered held on the Boston warrants in Dorchester District Court. He was not charged with the Quincy robberies but Capt. John Dougan said such a development was likely. Dougan said he was listed as a person of interest, not as a suspect.

He is also suspected of church robberies in Milton, Weymouth and Braintree, where a locked box of pennies collected for the homeless was raided at the First Congregational Church and has a record of similar thefts going back 10 years.

Most of the loot in the Quincy burglaries was small but it served as a warning for Quincy churchmen and women.

"The burglar took a water cooler bottle filled with money for Interfaith Social Services," said the Rev. David Hefling, pastor of St. Chrysostom's Episcopal

'State of the City' Message Monday Koch To Address Council On City's Financial Situation

Mayor Thomas Koch will go before the City Council next Monday to deliver a "State of the City" message on the city's financial situation and his plans to work through the mounting economic crisis.

Koch said he was confident that through sacrifices and cooperation the city "will weather this storm."

He gave no specifics on his plans but said "mid-year budget cuts may be necessary."

"These are challenging times and we will be facing difficult decisions in the near future, so we want to give the Council and the community a clear picture on exactly where we stand and how we can address these issues head-on," Koch said.

Administration officials are now working on an extensive review of the city's finances, and Koch said that mid-year budget cuts might be necessary amid the struggling state and national economics and lagging local revenue.

Koch did not announce specifics this week, but said he expects to have firm plans in place when he speaks with the Council next week. The mayor said he is focused on protecting the "core" services provided by the city: public safety, education, and basic public works.

"Everything is on the table, and sacrifices will be required. But I am confident that if we roll up our sleeves and work together, we will weather this storm," Koch said.

Koch said that the immediate budget crunch will not affect the city's long term efforts to make government operations more accountable and efficient, including ongoing efforts to reform the city's water and sewer department, the creation of a centralized finance department.

Post Office Zeroes In On Mailbox Graffiti

By LAURA GRIFFIN

Postal officials recently dispatched a paint bucket brigade across the city after a recent Quincy Sun story reported that mailboxes here were splattered with smut and smears.

From Houghs Neck to Wollaston, postal crews purged graffiti from dozens of mailboxes on direct orders from the top man in the region, James Holland, Postmaster General of the Boston District.

The photograph of a graffiti-covered mailbox on Beale Street struck a nerve with postal employees in North Quincy and Quincy Center who take considerable pride in their agency.

"Mr. Holland called me and told me the article had reached out," Jim Fatseas, the mayor's chief of staff said, describing a phone call from Holland the day after the Sun's story ran.

"Since that article ran, they stepped up their efforts," said Larry Prendeville, Commissioner of the Department of Public Works.

As for the number of boxes now sporting a new coat of federal blue paint, Prendeville estimated, "You could safely say at last 24 post office boxes."

"They definitely want to work with the city," Prendeville said, adding that he wants residents to report all graffiti to his office with messages at 617-376-1959.

Mailboxes are just one target of the city's renewed efforts to crack down on graffiti which officials acknowledge is a never-ending battle. Left unchecked, officials said graffiti multiplies and shouts decay.

City Council unanimously supported a resolution submitted recently by President Jay Davis who asked that private and public officials be invited to a City Council meeting to discuss graffiti.

Prendeville said he has been arranging a meeting with representatives from Verizon, National Grid, the postoffice and the police department.

"If we leave it there, it promotes more graffiti, perpetuates itself," said Police Lt. Pat Glynn, a detective with the department's Special Investigations Unit,

BEFORE AND AFTER. This mailbox in Wollaston on Beale Street sparkles after post office officials sent out a crew of who said efforts are being made to remove graffiti as soon as possible.

"It's a quality of life issue," said Glynn who compared graffiti to the 'broken window syndrome' whereby a broken window that is not repaired leads to vandals' breaking more windows

The Police Department, also, has long worked with school officials and T officials to combat graffiti using a three-pronged approach: 1. Documentation, 2. Removal, 3. Prosecution.

Glynn said Police Officer Steve Burgio oversees most of the graffiti complaints, "We funnel all the graffiti cases to him."

Burgio, also, coordinates efforts with T officials and keeps records on taggers who have their own distinct monikers "They travel by T."

Offenders can be charged with misdemeanor and felony offenses, according to Glynn who said the department has charged 10 individuals over the past year. (See box for penalties.)

Graffiti Offenses Carry Stiff Penalties

Flitting about with a spray can may seem like fun, but spraying or painting graffiti in schools, on sidewalks or business walls can lead to stiff penalties, according to Police Lt. Pat Glynn, a detective with the Special Investigations Unit.

Among the potential penalties are fines, incarceration and the loss of drivers' licenses for both misdemeanor and felony offenses.

Drivers can lose their license for one year. Those offenders who are too young to drive may have to wait extra years to apply for drivers' licenses, according to Glynn.

Glynn and Police Officer Steve Burgio have brought criminal charges against ten persons for graffiti offenses.

Such offenders can face finest that run into thousands of dollars as penalties can be assessed at three times the damage and jail time can run to at two years.

Offenses on federal property can lead to even stiffer penalties.

$300 Union Salary Increase One-Time Only

Koch Says State Health Plan Will Save Taxpayers $4M

Mayor Thomas Koch told a coalition of Greater Boston mayors that joining the state health insurance commission will be a "huge boost" toward fighting the troubled economy by saving Quincy's taxpayers $4 million in health care costs.

Koch was invited to speak at the Metropolitan Mayors Coalition, a group of mayors from cities surrounding Boston, after the city's employees voted to join the state insurance program, known as the G.I.C. or Group Insurance Commission.

Quincy is the largest city in Massachusetts to join the state program which Koch believes will cut millions from the city's skyrocketing health insurance costs through the joint bargaining power of over 250,000 members of G.I.C.

Koch has been erroneously criticized for agreeing to a one-time $300 base increase in employee's salaries.

A recent news report incorrectly stated that employees would receive $300 raises every year.

The salary increase will be applied this year for an estimated cost of $750,000 in 2009.

The salary increase was a counter-offer to the unions' quest for a two-percent salary increase, according to Chris Walker, Koch's Director of Policy.

During the bargaining, Koch offered and union leaders accepted the $300 increase which will go into effect on July 1.

Union leaders and Koch's administrators met more than 10 times over the past months.

Walker acknowledged this week that School

Committee members should have had earlier information about the negotiations and the salary increase.

The previous contract agreement guaranteed that if the city joined the G.I.C., employees would pay 10 percent of premiums and the city would pay 90 percent.

That meant that employee's insurance premiums could not be considered for reduction during last summer's negotiations.

Koch has repeatedly described the $300 salary hikes as a more than satisfactory bargaining chip.

"We had $5 on the table. We gave up $1 to the unions at the bargaining table to save $4 for the taxpayers. I think that math is pretty tough to argue, especially when the real number is $4 million."

NORFOLK COUNTY COMMISSIONERS recently awarded a $3,000 grant to DOVE, Inc. of Quincy in support of DOVE's 30 years of work to end domestic violence in the region. Davis Organizes Ward 4 Residents Email List

Email has proven to be so popular with his constituents that Ward 4 City Councillor Jay Davis has created and organized a ward-wide list to keep residents updated on events in the city and ward.

"During the last three to four years email contact from residents to me has drastically increased," he said. "On average I receive 20 to 30 emails and 25 phone calls per week. Emails have now surpassed phone call for constituent contacts."

Davis said his first "test" email was conducted last week when several hundred were sent to Ward 4 residents notifying them of the upcoming fall street sweeping schedule for the DPW.

"People can email anytime of the day and response is generally quicker," he said. "In urn, emails allow me to make quick contact with city department heads and employees to address residents' concerns."

If you would like to be included on the list, send your email to Davis at jddavis@ci.quincy.ma.us.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Oct. 19, 1784, an essay appears in the Gazette of the United States in which a writer named "Phocion" attacks presidential candidate Thomas Jefferson and accuses Jefferson of carrying on an affair with one of his slaves. Phocion turned out to be former Treasury Secretary Alexander Hamilton.

• On Oct. 18, 1867, the U.S. takes possession of Alaska after purchasing the territory from Russia for less than 2 cents an acre. The American public believed the land to be worthless and dubbed the purchase "Seward's Folly" and "Andrew Johnson's Polar Bear Garden."

• On Oct. 14, 1912, before a presidential campaign speech in Milwaukee, Theodore Roosevelt is shot at close range. The .32-caliber bullet failed to mortally wound the former president because its force was slowed by a glasses case and a manuscript in the breast pocket of Roosevelt's heavy coat.

• On Oct. 17, 1931, gangster Al Capone is sentenced to 11 years in prison for tax evasion and fined $80,000. Although wanted for bootlegging, tax evasion was the only charge the authorities could make stick, as Capone was known for intimidating and bribing witnesses.

• On Oct. 13, 1941, singer-songwriter Paul Simon is born on this day in Newark, N.J. Simon grew up in Forest Hills, N.Y., where he befriended Art Garfunkel in the sixth grade. The two began singing together, and by the time they were 16 they had released a single, "Hey, Schoolgirl," recording as Tom and Jerry.

• On Oct. 15, 1951, Hudson first entered stock-car racing with its Monobuilt design Hornet with a lower center of gravity. Hudson coined this innovation "step-down design" because, for the first time, passengers had to step down in order to get into a car.

• On Oct. 15, 1966, in McKinney, Texas, it was reported that a 75-year-old male driver received 10 traffic tickets, drove on the wrong side of the road four times, committed four hit-and-run offenses and caused six accidents, all within 20 minutes.

Again, One More Time . . .

Every once in awhile I find myself drifting back to my yesterdays.

And once again thinking of things I wish I could see, do, or hear one more time. And memories such as the following come rushing to mind:

• President-elect John Kennedy in his father's home in the Kennedy compound a few hours after his slim win over Richard Nixon, pouring drinks for and chatting informally with the press. Asked what he thought made the difference, he replied: "He (Nixon) stayed (that wasn't the word) too long in the South."

And confessing he was going to get in some golf when he got to the Kennedy home in Florida. "But don't print that, they'll think I'm another Ike."

• Mayor Amelio Della Chiesa walking through City Hall turning off unnecessary lights.

• Munroe MacLean on one side and Jack Donahue on the other plotting strategy at a Quincy-North Quincy Thanksgiving Day football game.

• Principal Henry Prairie at Point Junior High School stressing "Always give it (effort) that extra ounce."

• Ruth Gordon, calling from her New York City Park Avenue apartment or her home on Martha's Vineyard excited about her latest movie or TV guest appearance. And asking me to keep my eye on her birth certificate at City Hall.

• Riding a streetcar from Quincy Point to Quincy Square-and for only a nickel.

• Former Mayor and Councillor Tom Burgin standing up and telling his colleagues: "It's time to fish or cut bait."

• Dick Koch leading hundreds of his Koch Club youngsters down Hancock Street waving flags in the Flag Day parade.

• General Douglas MacArthur in a visit to First Parish Church, stopping by the Adams family pew and noting: "I am certain that John Quincy Adams must have prayed in this pew for divine guidance before he wrote the Monroe Doctrine."

World War II Programs at Library

The homefront during World War II will be explored by two eminent historians Monday and Tuesday, Oct. 20 and 21, at 7 p.m. in the Thomas Crane Public Library, 40 Washington St.

Dan Breen, a professor at Newbury College, will lecture on "Women Join the Workforce" on Tuesday, recalling Rosie the Riveter and the unprecedented demand for new workers during the war.

The program, "Homefront: Quincy in the War Years," is sponsored by the Friends of the Thomas Crane Public Library.

Book Discussion Oct. 21

"What's The Matter With Kansas? How Conservatives Won The Heart of America," by Thomas Frank, will be the subject of discussion Tuesday, Oct. 21, at 7 p.m. at United First Parish Church.

The discussion is part off a monthly series of books and workshops planned this year on economic and political justice and issues of globalization.

Attendants are welcome to bring a potluck dinner or other refreshments at 6:30 p.m. or simply join the group at 7 p.m.

• Dorothy Lamour helping this cub reporter interview her at a war bond rally at Veterans Memorial Stadium. (I kept asking her how she liked Quincy.)

At our second meeting 10 years later, pulling me down beside her at the Latin Quarter and kidding, "C'mon now, you're not a cub reporter anymore."

A 45-cent luncheon special at the Howard Johnson restaurant downstairs in the Granite Trust building now the Bank of America.

• John Gillis in a crew cut.

The jukebox at the Alhambra Tea Room where for a nickel you could get Glenn Miller, Tommy Dorsey, Harry James, Freddie Martin or Jimmy Dorsey with Helen O'Connell and Bob Eberly and all the big bands.

• A movie at the Strand, Lincoln, Wollaston or Quincy Theater.

• Buying a suit or sport coat from Ray Josephine at Remick's.

• Or a TV set from Remo and Pete DeNicola at South Shore Television.

• And a big band album from Jason Feldman at Jason's Music and Luggage shop.

• Bill Draicchio, "Officer Bill," crossing Pollard and St. Joseph's school pupils, at the busy intersection of Washington Street and Southern Artery.

• Jeppie Saunders' Fore River team - Jay and Fran Desmond, Nick Malvesti, Clappy Wildridge, Joe Shaprio, etc. - taking on the Brintree White Sox at Fore River field. (Some of those South Shore League players could have made the majors today.)

• With no rinks here getting up at 4 a.m. for Quincy High School hockey practice at Boston Ice Arena. (I'm not so sure about doing that again.)

And one more:

• Interviewing Grace Metalious at her Gilmanton, NH home shortly after her blockbuster best seller "Peyton Place" came out.

Residents were riled up and fuming that the book gave Gilmanton a bad name.

"Peyton Place is not Gilmanton but a combination of various small towns I have lived in," she insisted.

Grace was as earthly as some of the characters in her book. You couldn't help liking her.

After the interview and as I was leaving I told her I wish I had brought my copy of the book with me and had her autograph it.

"Just mail it to me and I'll autograph it and mail it back to you," she offered.

"Gee, I can't," I told her. "I have friends waiting to read my copy."

Oh," she said. "Tell the cheap b_____ to buy their own copy."

More memories some other time.

75 TON CRANE AT FITTING OUT DOCK FORE RIVER SHIPYARD, QUINCY POINT, MASS.

THIS IS A 1918 postcard showing the huge 75-ton crane on the fitting dock at the Fore River Shipyard. The crane was installed in 1901 to help build the cruiser Des Moines and the battleship Vermont, the first two large Navy vessels built at the yard. The crane dominated the skyline

Supports Proposed BJ's At Crown Colony

My family supports the proposed redevelopment of the former Patriot Ledger site at Crown Colony Office Park to build a new BJ's Wholesale Club.

In this economy, now more than ever shopping at BJ's Wholesale Club is an important means for me to save money on food and necessities for my household. Currently I have to travel to Weymouth to shop at the nearest BJ's. The convenience of having a BJ's closer to home in Quincy would not only make my weekly shopping easier but it will also help me save on gas and time. It would also be advantageous for our community in that it will provide Quincy with a tax-rate-able business.

Giving to the community is also important to BJ's and they have been an active donor to both Father Bill's and MainSpring and Cradles to Crayons. I hope the City Council will support BJ's Wholesale Club. I plan to attend the meetings to further show my support of this project.

Opposes Replacing Police With Civilian Flaggers

The other day while crossing over the Fore River Bridge from North Weymouth, I observed a Quincy police officer on detail preventing cars from running into each other between multiple orange cones.

I thought about the recent controversy over replacing police officers with civilian flagmen to "save" taxpayer money.

Proponents of flaggers calculate that $5 million will be saved annually which would put the cost of a flagger's wage at $33 per hour, including benefits.

The governor keeps touting the huge savings by urging non-police at work sites. However, this doesn't compute. It sounds like bogus math. A construction company will factor into their bids for work the total cost of flagmen into their bids for work; the total costs of flagmen and not just the hourly wage. There's training, uniforms and liability insurance before you even get to the benefits. Taxpayers will directly or indirectly pay for everything.

Civilian flaggers are smoke and mirrors. In the end, taxpayers will never see any savings at all because it's just pie in the sky politics.

Companies will be created to produce flaggers for construction firms. Lots of people will prosper but not the taxpayers.

Finally, our roads will be less safe for all of us. With a police officer, you also get somebody who is CPR certified and First Responder certified. With a flagger, you get someone wearing a nice orange vest. Think about it.

A Thank You From The Blue Star Mothers

On behalf of the Eastern MA Chapter of Blue Star Mothers, I would like to thank all those who helped at the "Service For Soldiers Fair" at the Wollaston Congregational Church. All goals for the CarePacks fundraising event were passed.

It was a beautiful and busy day at the fair. The outdoor games were fun; everyone got a sweet prize. The indoor gift making was productive. Baskets of handmade cards, decorated pillows, dream catchers, bookmarks, and bandanas were given to CarePacks for the next packaging event. Donated Nantasket Beach sea shells revealing hand-painted seascapes were gift-wrapped. The café was abundant with refreshments and baked goods. Through the generosity of local businesses, raffle prizes were awarded to many fairgoers.

More than a dozen lap quilts were sewn together at the quilt-a-thon. A few more are near completion. They will provide comfort and warmth to as many injured soldiers in a hospital or rehabilitation center in the U.S. through Operation Quiet Comfort.

At the end of the day nearly a dozen foal core tiles were covered with photocopies of past and present soldiers. We will continue creating the wall with pictures that didn't reach us that day. Our hope is to display the wall at Quincy City Hall and possibly at the MA State House during Veterans' Day week!

The "Service For Soldiers Fair" raised enough money to mail Care Packages to over 300 soldiers worldwide through CarePacks... All if those boxes will contain a handmade and heartfelt gift from someone who made an afternoon in August all about supporting the soldiers. The support of many made this event a real success.

Criticizes Appointment

Aside from being the lucky grandson of a former attorney general, nephew of a sheriff and son of a former court officer, just what qualifications does young Mr. Tufo have to support his being appointed to this position?

Once again this is a case of in your face appointments that are constantly being shoved down our throats. Is there any wonder why there is so much cynicism when it comes to not only big government, but especially local government as well.

City Plans Fines Hike On Illegal Parking

By FRANK McCAULEY

The cost of illegal parking may be going up.

Members of the Traffic Commission met with Mayor Arthur H. Tobin to discuss a draft plan that would divide the city into zones carrying fines of $10, $5 and $3 for illegal parking.

The Red Zone ($10) would be in the business areas and around the MBTA stations. The Yellow Zones ($5) along the city's main arteries and the White Zone ($3) in residential areas.

Tobin said it is hoped to have the draft plan ready as an ordinance for the Nov. 16 meeting of the City Council so the plan can be in effect by the Christmas season if the Council approves.

"We have to stop Quincy from becoming the dumping ground for MBTA parkers," said Police Chief Paul LaHive, a member of the commission.

ESTIMATED TAX BILLS IN MAIL BY END OF MONTH

Estimated tax bills should be in the mail to Quincy property owners before the end of October.

Governor Edward J. King last week signed legislation permitting 102 cities and towns that have not completed the revaluation process to send out estimated bills in their first mailings.

Then, once the actual tax rate is established, the adjustments will be made during the second mailings in May.

Assessor Patricia Ceriani said the estimated bills that are sent out will be the same as those that were mailed out for the first half of fiscal 1981.

The estimated bills, she said, will save the city considerable interest that would have to be paid on money borrowed to keep the city running.

Eggplant Surprise

It was one of those Sunday dinners and I was making a tray of fritters. Since I didn't have enough vegetables, I decided to use eggplant, which is probably a first. And surprise! They turned out pretty tasty with some help from seasonings.

Anyway, when the family all arrived for dinner, I had each of them taste the eggplant fritter, and they guessed from zucchini to mushroom. The only one to guess it was eggplant was my daughter Suzie.

Eggplant Fritters

1 medium eggplant (or about 3 cups shredded)
1 egg

2 tablespoons flour
1/4 cup grated Parmesan or Romano cheese

1/4 cup milk
Salt and pepper to taste
a pinch of basil or any favorite herb

Remove the skin from the eggplant and shred on cheese grater. Add the egg, flour, cheese salt, pepper and herbs. In hot oil, measure a tablespoon of the mixture and sauté it turning them until golden brown. Drain on a paper towel, and keep in a warming oven until ready to serve. If you like eggplant, you will enjoy eating it this way.

Performances will be staged Wednesdays and Thursdays at 7:30 p.m., Fridays and Saturdays at 8 p.m. and Sundays at 3 p.m.

The play, written by Academy Award-winning author John Patrick Shanley, chronicles the suspicions of a Catholic school principal who suspects sexual misconduct on the part of a parish priest in 1964, just after the assassination of President Kennedy.

Christian Potts of Quincy assumes the role of Father Flynn, the modern parish priest who is suspected of taking too much interest in the only black student in the parochial school.

Miriam (Miki) Joseph, also of Quincy, plays Sister Aloysius, the strong-minded, old fashioned principal of the school, who is determined to protect the children, not only just from harm but from bad habits — like using ball point pens.

Also in the cast are Jennifer Duval White of Whitman as the young and innocent Sister of Charity who is the boy's eighth grade teacher, and Christina Bynoe of Boston, who plays his mother.

Special Thanks To Sally Erickson

Seaside Gardeners Recognize Volunteers For Causeway Beautification

Seaside Gardeners of Squantum recently held a "thank you" luncheon for the 200 persons who volunteered their services to beautify the Squantum Causeway over the past ten years.

Special thanks were offered Sally Erickson who, as president of Seaside Gardeners, initiated the Causeway planting project in 1996, raised support from residents and city officials, and lobbied for the required approvals.

Louise Hannigan, South Shore district director of the State Garden Club Federation, attended the luncheon and thanked Erickson

Club members honored Erickson with a commemorative pastel painting, "A View of the Causeway" by Deni Sindel, Craft Chairperson of Seaside Gardeners.

Erickson remains as coordinator of ongoing maintenance of the project. Also active in maintaining the plantings are the "Friends of Seaside Gardeners," and the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office.

Erickson is Horticulture Chairperson of the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts and Civic Beautification Chairperson of Seaside Gardeners of Squamut.

The initial planting event took place on May 30, 1998. At the time, the planting of daylilies along the mile-long Causeway was the largest beautification project in the City of Quincy.

The process took two years and included meetings with then Mayor Jams Sheets and Rep. Bruce Ayers as well as the public works department and Metropolitan District Commission. Also, involved in the project were the Marina Bay Associates and landscape designer Mary Smith.

Publicity chairperson for the Seaside Gardeners is Marie Stamos.

THE SQUANTUM CAUSEWAY is the focal point of the painting presented to Sally Erickson, former president of the Seaside Gardeners (center) of Squantum, for her work starting and continuing the daylily planting project on the mile long entrance to Squantum. Louise Hannigan, South Shore district director of the State Garden Club Federation (left) and the artist, Deni Sindel, Craft Chairperson of the Seaside Gardeners joined club members at a recent luncheon held to thank Erickson and the 200 volunteers who maintain the plantings.

Eight QHS Students Earn AP Scholar Recognition

Eight students at Quincy High School have earned the designation of AP Scholar by the College Board in recognition of their exceptional achievement on the college-level Advanced Placement Program Exams.

Wu Xi He and Si Yuan Peng qualified for the AP Scholar with Distinction Award by earning the average grade of at least 3.5 on all AP Exams taken plus grades of 3 or higher on five or more of these exams.

Lili Gu, Wing Yee Tsoi,

Zi Heng Wang, Ming Zhen Wu, Shi Jun Wu and Cheng Wei Yang qualified for the AP Scholar Award by completing three or more AP Exams with grades of 3 or higher.

All but Lili Gu are seniors at the high school.

The College Board's Advanced Placement Program offers students an opportunity to take college-level course while in high school and received college credit or advanced placement or both for successful performance on all AP Exams.

About 18 per cent of the more than 1.4 million high school students at 16,000 secondary schools worldwide who took AP Exams performed at a sufficiently high level to merit the recognition of AP Scholar.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Embracing The Fire Prevention Message

I happened to speak with a woman who very recently had a fire within her home. She conveyed the proactive fire safety measures she and her family had taken prior to the incident. In view of the fire incident, she was so pleased she had taken an active role with her family, having updated smoke and CO alarms, and practicing in-house evacuation drills with her entire family, young children included.

Meanwhile the pleasure of the conversation was all mine, listening to the active role this family had taken toward a safer residence. She accepted the fire prevention message, made it her own, and shared it with a sense of accomplishment and pride.

She explained how she and her husband had sat down with their children and designed an evacuation plan together and then proceeded through the mechanics of implementing that plan. They discussed the importance of the fire alarm system and alternate means of escaping the house should the typical means be blocked by fire or smoke. They discussed the importance of shutting a door to add more time away from heat and smoke should their primary means of escape be blocked and the opportunity and advantage of exiting through windows onto roofs if need be.

Without actually acknowledging the acronym E.D.I.T.H., this family was practicing the concept. E.D.I.T.H. stands for Exit Drills In The Home. This concept encourages a family to develop and practice an evacuation plan from their home together. Early notification of fire through the presence of working smoke detectors goes hand-and-hand with the evacuation plan concept. In this instance this family embraced the whole concept. It was an uplifting experience for me listening to her unsolicited involvement in keeping a safer home and her sense of achievement having done so.

At our recent Open House, some visitors declined the opportunity to submit entries to our CO detector raffle. Home Depot donated 10 CO detectors for that purpose. These individuals declined participation where they had already complied with Nicole's Law, having installed CO detectors on every habitable level of their home. In each and every instance this was explained to us that the visitor would rather see someone else who had not yet fully complied have the opportunity to win a detector and be protected from CO as well.

When one has dedicated half a career enforcing and selling the fire prevention message, energized in the belief of its importance, the impact of that dedication cannot be accurately quantified to generate our own motivational feedback. However, receiving casual feedback from the individuals referred to here were gifts I couldn't have anticipated prior to any discussion with them, while their apparent diligence in proactively planning a safer home environment confirms for us that they have embraced what we are selling.

Proactive efforts toward a safer home environment work. I believe that each attempt at doing so creates a safer home and overall, a safer community. We therefore want to thank those of you who have embraced our message and we will continue to work diligently toward convincing all of its importance.

Thank you.

JACK 'N' JILL
CHILD CARE CENTERS

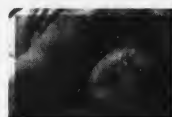

Over "85" Years of Caring
NAEYC Accredited Programs

Jack 'n' Jill Child Care, the second childcare facility established on the South Shore opened over 65 years ago in 1943. After decades of providing quality care, The Drew Family decided to expand their heritage by opening their first satellite facility located in Marina Bay in the mid 90's and an additional two locations in early 2000's. Currently, Jack 'n' Jill stands proud at 4 centers: West Quincy, Marina Bay, Whitman and Pembroke.

As stated by Kelley Joyce Executive V.P. of 17 years, "I am proud of how far we have come and admire the high caliber team of 72 individuals who unite our panel of childcare professionals and administration". One of the greatest qualities offered at Jack 'n' Jill is the longevity of their teachers. Maureen McCullough, a veteran infant teacher of 23 years, and 16 additional staff are amongst those that have been proudly recognized for over 10 years of service. These individuals are the strength and character that continually offer comfort to families looking for an environment that is the next best thing to home. Knowledge, dedication and enthusiasm, have also earned Jack 'n' Jill the recognition for achieving accreditation status from the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC). Congratulations to Jack 'n' Jill Child Care Centers for achieving 85 years of caring.

Computer Troubleshooters – Helping Small Businesses Save MONEY

Jerry Forde, the owner of Computer Troubleshooters located in West Quincy, has been in business for nearly four years now.

During this time, Jerry keeps hearing the same problems from nearly all the small businesses he visits.

"When my computers have problems or my network is down I have to call an IT company to come in and fix the problems. We typically have to wait hours or sometimes days to get the issues fixed. These unexpected costs are killing my business. How can I reduce or eliminate continual computer and network problems and reduce my costs."

As an example, let's take a look at cars. Computers are no different than cars. If you do regular maintenance, like change your oil every 3,000 miles your car will run better longer. Proactive maintenance reduces the cost of unexpected repairs that would otherwise continue to occur.

If you do not do regular maintenance on your car then it is only a matter of time when it will break down. When a car breaks down it costs you much more money, time, and frustration to get it fixed.

So, can this same proactive maintenance car model apply to computers and networks?

The answer is yes and Computer Troubleshooters has the solution. It's called the B.E.S.T. (Business Enhanced Support Technology) Plan. The B.E.S.T. service plans offer a low cost service plan available at a set monthly fee. It is a proactive approach to managing your IT infrastructure – lowering costs, drastically limiting downtime and causing fewer headaches.

"The B.E.S.T. plan allows us to monitor the client's computers 24/7/365 days a year and be proactively alerted to potential problems so they can be fixed before becoming major problems thus saving significant money.

Monthly reports are delivered to the clients so they can review first hand all the work we are doing behind the scenes to keep their computers running smoothly," Forde says.

"PROACTIVE high quality service at a fixed monthly cost. This is the future of our business and Computer Troubleshooters has the right solutions for your small business," he adds.

To discuss the Business Enhanced Support Technology (B.E.S.T.) plans that Computer Troubleshooters has on offer, contact Jerry Forde.

Red, White And Blue Quilts For Soldiers

It's red, white and blue all over at Quilters' Compass where piles of quilts handmade for American soldiers are stacked and ready to go.

As of Tuesday, Pat Fey counted 108 quilts ready for shipment to soldiers in Iraq, Afghanistan and Germany.

Fey said another 100 handmade quilts are on their way and should be ready for pickup this week by Lesley Trubiano, the state coordinator for Soldiers' Angels.

"The theme was patriotic," Fey said of the color scheme on all the quilts. Many of the 50 students helped make quilts at her parkingway classes and shop.

The quilts are as varied as the different people who created them. Fey described seniors from 1000 Southern Artery, 4th graders from Rhode Island, campers and two men who stitched a smart design.

One was made by the mother of a soldier who just came home from Iraq as did Fey's niece and nephew.

"I only started doing this three months ago," said Fey, adding that people respond to the soldiers "in a special way."

The Soldiers' Angels project has a goal of 10,000 quilts, according to Fey.

Trubiano, a Braintree resident, will collect the Quincy quilts later this week and they will then be shipped to North Carolina and California.

Trubiano said that Soldiers Angels are researching the cheapest method of shipment and the possibility of donated transport.

"Everybody is a volunteer," Trubiano said of Soldiers Angels, a nonprofit group founded in 2003.

Soldiers' Angels offers 20 teams and programs to aid the Armed Forces.

The groups motto is, "May No Soldier Go Unloved."

Their website describes the 20 different teams and programs offered by the group. These include letters, care packages, assistance to wounded, support for families and support for chaplains as well as the "Guardian Angels for Soldiers' Pets which cares for pets during absences.

The group's website is soldiersangels.org.

QMC, Red Cross Bloodmobile Visits Hospital Oct. 30

On the eve of Halloween and its ghosts and goblins, the Quincy Medical Center and the American Red Cross remind us that there is nothing scarier than a shortage of supply in the blood bank.

To make up for that, the Red Cross Bloodmobile will be in Conference Rooms A to D at Quincy Medical Center, 114 Whitwell St., Thursday, Oct. 30, from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Nearly 2,000 units of blood are needed each day right here in Quincy and it only takes about an hour's time and a small needle pinch to add to that life-saving supply.

Donors must be 17 years of age or older, weigh 110 pounds or more and feel in good enough health to give blood. Call 1-800-GIVE-LIFE (1-800-448-3543) to schedule an appointment.

ment, and streamlining other services.

"In fact, challenging times like today make these reforms even more vital for the future," Koch said.

While focusing on the current budget, Koch said a number of steps taken over the last several months will help ease potential problems in the future. The City expects to save between $4 million in insurance costs next year thanks to an agreement to enroll city workers in the state Group Insurance Commission.

Koch and other mayors from across the state met with Gov. Deval Patrick at the State House last week, where state officials outlined preliminary plans to close a $1 billion gap in the state budget. Patrick said cuts to local aid-which includes $43 million to Quincy-would be a last resort.

Local aid cuts would be "devastating," Koch said, but added that the administration is working through a number of scenarios if they happen. He noted that his office is in constant contact with the city's state legislative delegation, which he said is "working tirelessly" to protect Quincy's interests at the state level.

"We have to be prepared, but I think everyone realizes how vital state aid is for education and so many other services the city provides," Koch said.

Animals Receive Blessing At Point Congregational

Fifteen dogs, a bird, a turtle and a goat recently were the recipients of a "Blessing of the Animals" from the Rev. Ann Suzedell at the Quincy Point Congregational Church.

The idea for the ceremony was suggested by students at the Quincy Point church

Sunday School who are raising money for a Heifer Project "Ark of Animals."

But the inspiration goes back to St. Francis of Assisi. Who is most often pictured in the brown-hooded robe of his order with a bird perched on his shoulder.

He urged everyone to protect and care for all God's creatures and has come to be known as the patron saint of animals.

Fittingly, the ceremony at Quincy Point Congregational Church was held on St. Francis Sunday, Oct. 5.

Several Concerns Raised

Council To Continue Hearing On Lowe's Project

By LAURA GRIFFIN

The City Council will continue its public hearing on the proposed Lowe's Home Improvement Warehouse on Burgin Parkway, South Quincy, at 6:30 p.m., Monday, October 20.

The Lowe's development team garnered considerable public support, strong union support and council support for the project at the public hearing during last week's three and a half hour discussion.

"We look forward to the job creation," said Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee, voicing the opinion of several councillors.

However, developers, also, faced new queries on clearance by state environmental agencies, traffic barriers, the unknown plans for a 2.3 to 2.5 acre lot carved out from within the site, tree plantings, and a planned 50-foot sign.

The Planning Board voted to recommend the Lowe's development on Oct. 1, but warned that the City Council should adopt the specific safeguards detailed in the report and the recommendations from city agencies.

"Failure to place adequate development controls... will create significant future unacceptable access, safety and traffic impacts," according to the report.

The Lowe's project would include a 124,000 square foot building with a 29,000 square foot garden center and 435 parking spaces on 16.3 acres with all access through the former Penn Street segment via Burgin Parkway.

The parcel includes the Grasso Memorial Park which will be relocated, and the lots housing Aslanis Seafood, Mondadnock Water Co., and four homes on Columbia Street, all of which would be demolished. Mondadnock will be relocated to the Southeastern corner of the tract.

Planning Director Dennis Harrington said the Lowe's plans were still "under the scrutiny of the DEP (state's Department of Environmental Protection)" which is reviewing its potential impact on Town Brook and the 100-year flood plan.

At last week's meeting, Harry Brett, Business Agent for the Plumbers Union # 12, Boston, outlined union support for Lowe's.

Brett told councillors that Lowe's has made a commitment for union labor both during and after construction of their retail home improvement center.

"I do think Lowe's is a positive project," said Harrington who submitted a six-page report approved by the Planning Board.

Harrington outlined architectural changes and tree plantings that Lowe's added at the city's request, adding, "Lowe's has stepped up to the plate."

However, Harrington and several speakers, also, cited a separate 2.5 acre segment nestled within the 16.3 parcel that had originally been designated as green space but, apparently, will be developed at a later date.

"It's a little PUD inside a PUD development," Harrington said, "There's going to be something else..."

Edward Fleming, attorney for the developer, said the segment had been "conveyed to another party (Michael Verocchi)," but assured councillors that, as a PUD-zoned lot, they would have final approval of any changes.

Under the PUD, the smaller lot can accommodate a 22,500 square foot building with 57 parking spaces.

However, Harrington, also, said that Lowe's had not agreed to all of the recommendations of the Planning Board, such as sidewalk, and roof plantings and screening.

"They refuse to screen roof equipment," Harrington said, referring to the machinery which would be installed on the roof for heat or air-conditioning and would be visible from the street.

"We started this three years ago," said Fleming who described five to six neighborhood meetings. Fleming said Lowe's made "substantial changes in response to neighborhood concerns," including reversing the building front to back, added landscaping and wrought-iron fencing."

"The building (on the plan) was flipped to the other side of the lot," said Fleming after describing before noting a number other concessions and stating "Lowe's has agreed to establish a mitigation fund."

Fleming said the Lowe's plan had undergone the "most extensive review in the city's history," winning required approvals by local boards and state agencies, as well as votes by the City Council and the state legislature for the relocation of Grasso Memorial Park.

Fleming, said that the company could not agree to some expensive proposals, such as garden space on the roof and the purchase of additional property.

In his report, Harrington informed councillors that the entire property is owned by Brewster Family Land Trust.

"One corporation controls nine trusts. This is a Planned Unit Development so (Brewster) can lease it to Lowe's for 20 years," Harrington said, adding that the Lowe's corporation filed the application.

Edward Boiteau, P.E., and Traffic Engineer Michael Hall, both of Tetra Tech Rizzo, represented the developer. They, also, outlined revisions and improvements to the original plans.

Councillors voiced several concerns and City Council President Jay Davis said that "some issues (have) to be worked out."

Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi forecast heavier traffic ahead on Burgin Parkway while Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin asked why the proposal does not conform to the city shade tree ordinances.

"It didn't apply," said Fleming, noting that the ordinance was passed after Lowe's application.

Coughlin suggested that compliance with the shade tree ordinance may not be required, but could be significant in garnering council support. He described the massive impervious surface area detailed in the plans.

"I have a real problem with a 50-foot sign," said Councillor John Keenan who asked about environmental issues, including the impact of the project on the smelt in the Town Brook.

Speakers, also, included William Aylward, publisher of the Black's Creek newsletter and John Eckblom, a business owner on Liberty Street.

Eckblom said he spoke for the "quiet majority" when he asked that two-way traffic be reinstated on Columbia Street and the remainder of Penn Street and the barriers removed.

"It's driven the traffic into the neighborhood,"

Eckblom said of the barriers which he believes will seriously hinder fire and police department access to homes.

Eckblom submitted photos of clogged traffic on Columbia, Plain and Liberty Streets.

"If the people are silent, we can't address this issue," Davis said after the meeting, noting that he'd only heard from area residents pleased with the barriers and can not respond to "a silent majority" that don't contact him.

Aylward who has filed an appeal of the Conservation Commission decision asked why there was no mention of environmental peer review and said, "The DEP has not spoken on whether it is satisfied."

Aylward, also, reminded councillors that the public comment period for MEPA, the environmental protection agency, does not end until Oct. 24.

Residents Gayle Patten and Maureen Seivour submitted letters urging councillors to require oversight and protections for their neighborhood.

In his letter, Jim Brady provided councillors with his research, including a list of several dozen references, on the impact of "big box" retailers on neighborhoods.

Additional comment will be allowed when the hearing resumes.

City Seeks Court Approval To Raze Former Fruit Stand

City officials will seek court approval to order the demolition of a former fruit stand at 441 Quincy Avenue.

"I have moved forward to raze (the structure)," Jay Duca, Inspectional Service Chief said last week, adding he expects to return to court with a "compelling" case for demolition.

Duca said he has already received a report from Acting Fire Chief Joseph Barron who labelled the 58-year-old wooden building a hazard. Duca is awaiting a similar report from the City Engineer.

"We're going to take whatever steps (are necessary)," Duca said of the vacant building which he said is "structurally not safe."

The half-century old building which is now boarded up stands on Quincy Ave. near the foot of Ricciuti Drive.

City council recently voted unanimously to support the demolition through a resolution submitted by Council President Jay Davis who represents Ward 4.

Davis called the location a "major gateway in and out of the City of Quincy" and cited the many improvements to other businesses in the area.

In contrast, Davis charged that the owner has made no effort to raze or repair the structure.

According to city records, the property is owned by a trust. Efforts to reach the owner were unsuccessful, but, apparently, the property is for sale.

In the past year, Duca has sought and won court approval for demolition orders for other buildings in the city, such as a house on Arbideen Road, Squantum.

The efforts coincide with the anti-blight measures enacted by City Council last year which set standards for residential and business properties in the city.

Code Enforcement Officer Ken Burke said last week his office follows up on complaints on blight, graffiti and litter, such as the council's order regulating newspaper racks and requirements for their upkeep.

Burke invited residents to call his office, 617-376-1328, with any reports or questions on blight issues.

Five Bellotti Staff Members Certified By National Health Commission

Five members of Sheriff Michael Bellotti's staff at the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office were recognized this week as Certified Correctional Health Professionals by the National Commission on Correctional Health Care.

Among the certificate recipients was Supt. Peter Perroncello, who oversees all jail operations at the Norfolk County Correctional Center.

"Peter Perroncello leads by example," said Bellotti. "He is longtime proponent of training and certification, and he has established a standard of professionalism that permeates our entire operations force."

"I'm proud to see our health staff pass the certification exam and demonstrate their expertise in this specialized set of circumstances within the health field."

Registered nurses Laurie Carroll, Michael Kaurenan, Denise Burke and dental hygienist Pauline Silva also received recognition from the National Commission on Correctional Health Care (NCHC), whose stated mission is "to improve the quality of care in the nation's jails, prisons, and juvenile detention and confinement facilities."

Assistant Deputy Supt. Tara Brown, who is the chief of the Health Services Unit, and Kristina Russo, the director of the Psychological Services at the jail, were certified by the NCHC earlier this year.

"The medical treatment requirements of an inmate population tend to be more intensified than those of the general population, particularly in the mental health area," Bellotti said. "Our highly trained staff deserves the recognition they are receiving for the expert work they do."

The Norfolk County Sheriff's Office has earned a reputation for this commitment to professionalism. The American Jail Association has certified Perroncello as a jail manager, and 22 correction officers have received AJA certification, with another 15 on the verge of certification as they await results from a recent exam.

Turning Garages Into Living Space

By Samantha Mazzotta

Weatherstripping Basics

Q. This is my second year in an apartment with drafty windows. The landlord said it was OK for us to do whatever we like to stop the cold air from rushing in. I'm tired of putting up crinkly, ugly plastic sheets, though. Is there an alternative? — Blair J., Malden, Mass.

A. You have some additional options besides plastic sheeting. Weatherstripping can stop drafts while allowing windows to be opened or closed as usual. Three types of material are available: metal, vinyl or felt. They are attached one of two ways — with brads (very small nails) or by adhesive attached to the back of the strip. Vinyl or felt stripping is easier to work with, while metal stripping is much more durable.

Since you're in a temporary living situation, I'd recommend you stick with vinyl weatherstripping, particularly compressible foam strips. These strips come on a roll that costs less than $10, and they have an adhesive backing so that all you have to do is peel and stick. Run a strip along the bottom of the window sash — the part that meets the frame when you close the window.

Be sure clean the adhesive area well and let dry. If the outdoor temperature is below 45 degrees Fahrenheit, you'll want to heat the sash bottom for a couple of minutes with a hair dryer to ensure the strip will stick well.

If your windows rattle and have drafts coming in all around, add tubular vinyl stripping. This is a roll of tubing, sometimes with a flat strip protruding from the side. It's applied to the outside of the window along the edges. Hold the strip flat and taut against the bottom and sides of the sash while a partner carefully nails the tubing to the sash (use only brads to attach, and don't nail to the sill).

If you can't access the outside of the windows because you're in an upper-level apartment, run felt weatherstripping along the interior sides of the window sash, folding over and along the top and bottom if possible. The felt strip may have an adhesive back, but should also be attached with brads spaced about 3 inches apart.

(NAPSA)-Finding inexpensive ways to expand living space is a top priority for many American families. The good news is that there are plenty of ways to find more room in your home without expensive renovations.

For instance, giving your garage a quick makeover can help turn it into an extra playroom, a home office or even a workout room. Or a few tweaks could increase the storage space in your garage, helping you free up living space throughout your house. Whatever your reasons for expanding the garage, a few expert tips could help:

Wall To Wall

If you plan to use the garage for storage, consider covering the walls with a material you can use to hang tools and equipment. Try different types of plywood, slatboard or a specially designed organizing system. If you want to use the garage for a living space, new types of wood paneling can be an inexpensive quick fix. Use it to cover unattractive walls and to give the garage a clean, modern look.

Fabulous Floors

Chances are your garage floor needs some work and a product such as Behr Premium 2-Part Epoxy Garage Floor Coating can do the trick. Available at participating The Home Depot stores, it's a high-performance, water-based coating that helps transform concrete floors by giving them a showroom-quality finish. The premium coating requires no priming and, once mixed, is ready for use by simply rolling the coating on right from the built-in paint tray. The durable finish is easy to clean, has a unique, built-in, nonskid finish and resists scuffing, fading, cracking, peeling and blistering. It comes in two popular premixed colors, Silver Gray and Tan, and can be tinted into 36 custom colors. And for those who still plan to use their garage for the car, the product provides long-lasting protection against motor oil, gasoline, anti-freeze, brake fluid, salt, hot tire pickup and other common elements.

Close The Door

If you're keeping your current garage door, use some caulk to seal up any cracks it might have. If you plan to get a new garage door, consider buying one that is insulated. Doing so can help make your garage a year-round room and can also help with heating and cooling bills. If you plan to install the garage door yourself, be sure to measure accurately, so the new door has plenty of space to roll up.

There are easy ways to convert your garage floor into a high-performance, showroom-quality floor.

Registry Of Deeds Quarterly Real Estate Activity Report

Total dollar volume of real estate sales in Norfolk County for the quarter period from July to September, 2008, settled at $1.34 billion, only slightly below the total from the quarter April to June, reports Norfolk County Register of Deeds William P. O'Donnell.

"A year to year comparison to the July to September, 2007 quarter, however, shows this total value off 36 percent," O'Donnell said. "The total number of 3,887 deeds recorded during the July to September, 2008 quarter was down 10 percent, which actually reflected an improvement over the sharp 46 percent decline in the April to June quarter's year to year look back," he said.

O'Donnell said "this levelling in the number of deeds recorded indicates some resilience in the overall activity in the Norfolk real estate market, although the average sale price of deeds over $1,000 (both residential and commercial properties) fell to $516,189, a 28% decrease from the same quarter in 2007.

"At least some of this decline is most likely attributable to the strength of the previous year's quarter's more numerous higher end commercial transactions. This average price was off only 8% from the April to June, 2008 quarter."

O'Donnell also reported mortgage recording activity declined this past quarter, down 23% on a year-to-year basis with 6,435 new mortgages being recorded in the quarter. Total mortgage value for the quarter stood at just over $2.7 billion, off 70% from July to September, 2007.

"It is important to note that this total mortgage value amount does not necessarily represent the true increase in indebtedness as some mortgages may be recorded multiple times against different parcels of land, are refinances simply replacing existing debt, or are recorded to secure equity credit lines which may not be drawn to their capacity," O'Donnell said.

The Registry of Deeds, located at 649 High St., Dedham, is the principal office for real property in Norfolk County. Call 781-461-6101 for more information.

Victim Churches Taking Steps Against Looting

Church in Wollaston, one of the houses of worship listed by police on the hit list.

"I don't know how much money was in it. Probably less than $100, several weeks collection. Now we're going to lock it up every week with the church brass. We can't afford to lose it and we have a number of faces go through every day that we don't recognize."

The thief hit the St. Vincent de Paul Society Poor Boxes at St. John the Baptist Church in Quincy Center and stole some microphones as well.

"This has really been an ongoing problem," said the Rev. Richard E. Cannon, the pastor, writing in the church bulletin. "It was decided that the poor boxes will be removed to better safeguard our church and worship environment."

"For those who are so generous in the important work of our St. Vincent de Paul Society, please send donations directly into the rectory or please put a yellow envelope directly into the regular parish collection, with the donation clearly marked for the St. Vincent de Paul Society."

The burglar also hit the Union Congregational Church of Wollaston, ransacking the office of the minister, the Rev. John Carl Swanson, and making off with some $200 which had been destined to buy pizza for neighborhood children.

When the man made a second appearance at the church asking for money, he was turned down and the Rev. Swanson thought his mien turned nasty and he drove away in a car that looked like the Rev. Gifford's.

A portion of copper tubing was taken from the roof of one building at the Central Baptist Church in Quincy Center.

"We have turned the matter of prevention over to the trustees," said Pam Bruce, the church secretary. "I've heard recommendations for more lighting and motion detectors in the area."

The Rev. Karen Palmatier, minister of the Covenant Congregational Church, said she was curious who reported the theft at her church.

"We're not doing anything different," she said.

"We always keep the office door locked. A lot of people pass through here."

In addition to those already mentioned, the Quincy churches that were victimized included the First Presbyterian Church on Franklin Street and St. Joseph's Church in Quincy Point.

Ten years ago, Hatfield was charged with using his girl friend's 4 or 5-year-old daughter to scam sympathetic priests. He served a jail term for larceny and has at least five convictions for grand theft auto in the past 15 years.

Ghost Hunter To Check Spooks On Haunted Ship

Shannon Sylvia, the star of the Ghost Hunters International TV show, will be hunting spooks on the USS Salem Saturday, Oct. 18, from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. during the annual Haunted Ship attraction.

"Shannon first visited the ship back in September as part of a paranormal investigation conducted by her friends at Mass Paranormal," said Michael Condon, the executive director.

"We are really excited to have her back on board as part of our Haunted Ship event."

After her September visit, he noted, Sylvia appeared on Fox 25 News and disclosed emphatically that the USS Salem was indeed haunted.

In addition to Sylvia's appearance, Mass Paranormal investigators will give people an opportunity to go on a ghost tour of the ship conducted by team members.

Saturday from 12 noon to 4 p.m. will also be City of Quincy Day aboard the Salem. Sponsored by Mayor Thomas P. Koch, the City Council and the City's Legislative delegation.

"We are really delighted to have the support of the Mayor and our elected officials in this year's event," said Condon.

"The Haunted Ship was started more than a dozen years ago by our volunteer staff as a weekend-long fundraiser. It has grown to a 13-day, multi-week celebration and it's our single biggest fund raiser each year."

Haunted Ship days aboard the Salem will continue daily until Friday, Oct. 31, with the exception of Oct. 20, 21 and 22. Evening events are from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. and Family Days Saturdays and Sundays from 12 noon to 4 p.m.

A Job Well Done

On Tuesday, October 8, 2008, at approximately 12:05 p.m., Officers John O'Donnell and Brian Flaherty were dispatched to 91 Highland Avenue on a report of a breaking and entering in progress. The suspect was described as an Asian male standing at the side of the house.

Officer Flaherty arrived on location first and spotted the suspect next to the house. As the suspect fled, Officer Flaherty radioed, "He's running through the back yard". Officer O'Donnell hurried over to the corner of Hobart and Belmont Streets in order to secure a perimeter. Seconds later, Officer Flaherty, while in foot pursuit, stated over the radio, "He's running back onto Highland Avenue."

Officer O'Donnell turned around at the intersection of Hobart Street and Highland Avenue and spotted the suspect, an Asian male with a backpack on, running southbound on Highland Avenue, then turning northbound onto Hobart Street, followed by a female in close pursuit of the suspect. This female was soon identified as off-duty Officer Kristen Bowes, who closed in quickly on the suspect and then apprehend him from behind with both arms and subsequently taken to the ground. Officer O'Donnell then handcuffed the suspect.

The suspect was searched and inside his backpack were his identification, green bolt cutters and gray all-purpose work gloves. Officer Flaherty arrived on scene and confirmed that the suspect was the same person who was at the side door of the residence and fled upon seeing the Police. Officer Flaherty said the suspect leaped over the railing in the backyard and fled.

Officer Bowes, who was off-duty, stated that she observed the suspect loitering in the yard where the break occurred. She witnessed him ring the doorbell for a few minutes, then go back out to the front of the house. She said he was there for several minutes when she heard a loud noise like a window breaking. She said this is when she called the Police. She said that she then observed a truck come down the street and the suspect briefly ducked out of sight until the vehicle passed by. After looking around, the suspect went back to the side door and this was when Officer Flaherty arrived.

After securing the suspect, Officer O'Donnell went to the scene of the crime and observed that the window of the side door was smashed with glass on the ground. There were also several pry marks on the wood portion of the door between the knob and the dead bolt. The storm door was unlocked.

The suspect, a 20 year old Boston resident was charged with breaking and entering in the daytime and possession of burglarious tools. The victims were not home at the time and they were soon contacted. Officers searching the area for additional evidence found a crowbar in a nearby backyard.

Red Raiders Dominate, Improve To 4-1 Record

By SEAN BRENNAN

And the beat goes on for the North Quincy Red Raiders.

Coming off three consecutive victories over Sharon (28-0), Plymouth South (12-7) and Whitman-Hanson (21-0) High Schools, North Quincy continued to flex its muscles over the weekend with another smack down of a Patriot League opponent.

The Raiders (4-1 overall, 2-1 in Patriot League play) once again dominated on defense, pitching their third shutout in the last month, and used a power running game and spectacular play of its offensive line to close out Pembroke High School 32-0 on Saturday.

The win, the team's fourth victory in a row and second league win in as many weeks, puts North Quincy in a three-way tie for first place in the Patriot League's Fisher Division with Hanover and Rockland High Schools at 1-0. North is scheduled to play both Rockland (Oct. 17) and Hanover (Oct. 24) in the coming weeks.

"It was a great team win for us against Pembroke," said NQ head coach Jim Connor. "For the fourth straight week we had a strong running game and a strong defensive effort."

"We are starting to play complete football games and the chemistry that I have seen developing on both sides of the ball is great. I keep telling the kids that if they give 100% we should keep coming out on top."

With the defense playing at the highest level at the moment-one offensive touchdown in the last 16 quarters, it was the offense's time to shine against Pembroke. More specifically the offensive line's time to shine.

Five North Quincy running backs rushed for more than 30 yards apiece as the team racked up over 300 yards on 45 carries, finishing the game with three touchdowns. Fullback Brian Donaghey led all rushers with 63 yards. But it was the play of the five starters on the O-Line that got the job done in the trenches all game long.

"Chris Bergeron, AJ Morfe, Joe Benoit, Mike Benoit and RJ Barden have all been playing together a long time," said Connor. "They know each other's limits and have great chemistry. That is so valuable."

"They are all 'football fans.' They seem to enjoy playing with each other and they are all just a real good football players. Their play helps the defense as much as the offense."

After a back-and-forth first quarter of play, neither team was able to find the end zone as the game went into the second quarter tied at 0-0. In the second quarter, the Raiders' received contributions from both sides of the ball. Junior quarterback Mike Stanton scored on a one-yard run to close out an extended drive that started the quarter; a successful point after attempt (PAT) put North up 7-0 with time running out in the first half.

On Pembroke's final drive of the second quarter the North defense came through, like it has over and over again the last month, with a big play. Pembroke, facing a third and 10 at its own 15-yard line, dropped back into a passing formation, but North's Joe Benoit came flying through the middle of the Pembroke line and forced a fumble that was recovered at the Pembroke seven-yard line.

On third down and goal to go for the Raiders, Stanton found senior captain Patrick Watkins open in the flat for the seven-yard touchdown. A missed PAT put the score at 13-0 North Quincy at the halftime break.

Pembroke came out of the locker room looking to get back into the game; Andrew Chapman broke multiple tackles on the kickoff, returning the ball 64-yards, to open the second half, but the Raider defense, again, stood its ground.

North's Matt Jay (along with Tim Stille), who had saved a touchdown with a shoe-string tackle on Chapman's kickoff return, made the play of the game for NQ on third down and long for Pembroke on their opening drive of the half. After two minimal runs put Pembroke in a third and long situation, Jay intercepted a pass in the end zone, preserving the 13-0 lead and giving the ball back to the Raiders.

"We had plenty of great plays by our defense, but this interception by Matt was the play of the game," added Connor. "The score was only 13-0 and a touchdown there changes the whole complexion of the game. Big play."

Stanton, his stable of running backs and his offensive line took advantage of the play of Jay and the defense by storming down the field and scoring another touchdown-after first punting the ball back to Pembroke and forcing the Titans to give it back on downs. Watkins (2 TDs) scored on a six-yard run to finish off the drive. Another missed PAT put the score at 19-0 entering the final quarter of play.

Pembroke, facing a 19-0 fourth quarter deficit, took the ball back after Watkins second touchdown looking to pass the ball and score quickly. But NQ's RJ Barden had other ideas.

On Pembroke's first play from scrimmage, quarterback Luke Leavitt dropped back to pass, but Barden jumped the route and took the interception 32 yards for the score; the final nail in the coffin.

"Barden is a heck of a player," said Connor. "That play changed the game. (The lead) didn't feel that comfortable until that point."

"The defense did their job all game. We allowed only 71 yards of total offense against Pembroke and credit has to go to Coach Dom Barbudo-the defensive coordinator-who has done a great job getting them prepared all season."

North Quincy finished up the scoring on its final possession of the game. The offensive line wore down the Pembroke defense on this 10-play, 56-yard drive. The Raiders' Terrell Staley closed out the drive with a 22-yard touchdown run. Final score: NQ 32, Pembroke 0.

North Quincy hosts Rockland at 7 p.m. Friday at Veterans Stadium.

Notes: The Raider run defense allowed only 51 yards on 21 carries against Pembroke... NQ's next four games (Rockland, Hanover, Randolph and Middleboro) are all against Fisher Division opponents... North has scored 93 points and has allowed just 31 points against. That differential is the best +/- in the Patriot League... During their four game winning streak NQ has a +10 turnover ratio (13 for and three against).

Presidents Bow To Dragons

The Quincy Presidents put up a resilient fight against football powerhouse Duxbury High School last Saturday at Veterans Memorial Stadium, but in the end, lost 18-0.

With the loss, Quincy's record now stands at 2-3 overall and 1-1 in Patriot League play. The Presidents, who play in the Keenan Division of the Patriot League, had previously beaten Rockland High School, a member of the Fisher Division, 7-6, two weeks ago for its only Patriot League win of the fall.

The game versus the Duxbury Dragons coincided with Homecoming Weekend for the QHS football program, and after a scoreless first quarter of play, the potential was still there for a probably upset of one of Massachusetts' best football programs. But that 0-0 score quickly became an 11-0 deficit by halftime.

Duxbury took its first possession of the second quarter deep into the Presidents' side of midfield, but after missing on two attempts for a touchdown, the Dragons settled for a field goal try. Duxbury kicker Ben Starzell lined up for a 20-yard attempt and buried it right between the posts for the 3-0 lead.

After the Presidents were forced to give the ball back to the Dragons on their next possession, Duxbury once again capitalized with points. As time was running out on the quarter, the Dragons moved down the field and eventually found themselves facing a first and goal from inside the Quincy 10-yard line.

Duxbury quarterback Sean Cross dropped back and found wide receiver Ian Whitney wide open on a crossing pattern for a three-yard touchdown score. Cross then found Whitney open in the back of the end zone to complete the two-point conversion. At the end of the first half Duxbury held an 11-0 lead.

When the second half got under way it was more of the same for the Presidents: very little movement on offense and too much time on the field for the defense. After a scoreless third quarter of play, Duxbury finished off the scoring with a long touchdown pass from Cross to wide receiver Quinn Cully. The 46-yard touchdown bomb quelled any thought Quincy may have had of making a late-game comeback.

Duxbury junior Bobby Murphy (80 yards rushing), playing in place of all-state running back Shane DiBona, had two potential touchdowns called back because of penalties, but the Presidents could never capitalize on the Dragons' mistakes.

This game against Duxbury began a five-game stretch in which the Presidents are scheduled to play every member of the Keenan Division of the Patriot League. Next up for Quincy is an away game against Whitman-Hanson HS this Friday at 7 p.m.

Quincy will then play a road game against Silver Lake HS (Oct. 25), a home game against Scituate HS (Oct. 31), before ending the season with away games against Hingham HS (Nov. 7) and North Quincy HS (Nov. 27).

Notes: Quincy is 1-2 at Veterans Memorial Stadium and 1-1 on the road... The Presidents have scored 54 points in five games and have allowed 60 points.

Fitness Back-Up Plan

Setting a realistic fitness schedule is one of the most important elements in developing a successful fitness and nutrition routine.

It is equally important to remember that each day may not work out exactly as we had planned. Emergencies, family priorities and last-minute appointments all can put a wrench in the most carefully planned fitness regimen.

Establishing a fitness back-up plan can eliminate the stress or guilt that can occur from the inability to follow your fitness routine completely. The key is to remain active and look for opportunities to squeeze alternative activities into your day.

Here are some tips:

- Stretch. Take several minutes out of your day to stretch your whole body. Stretching your shoulders, neck, back, arms and legs can help you relax and promote blood flow to areas of the body that may otherwise remain sedentary and tense all day.

- Take the stairs! Walk the stairs instead of using the elevator. Climbing a few flights of stairs several times a day will increase your heart rate slightly and help burn extra calories.

- Park the car and walk. Don't keep driving around the parking lot looking for a close-in space to become available. The extra few feet you may have to walk to reach your destination is a great way to stimulate your muscles.

- Eat breakfast. Starting your day with a well-balanced meal is extremely important to kick-start your metabolism and prepare your body for the day's activities.

- Take a walk. You may have missed your favorite aerobic class at the gym, but you can still complete your aerobic workout. Taking a walk or cycling are great alternatives that can be done almost anywhere.

- Drink plenty of water. Staying hydrated is always important. Water helps the functions of your muscles and tissues, and can act as an appetite suppressant.

- Play with the kids. Running around with (or after) the kids is a fun way to exercise. The constant moving, bending and reaching incorporate all of the components of most fitness programs.

While these fitness back-up tips cannot replace the benefits of a dedicated fitness routine, they are a healthy alternative to doing nothing when your fitness program gets sidetracked.

Always consult a physician before beginning an exercise program. If you have a fitness or training question, write to Andrea in care of King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475.

Candy Or Apples?

Tips For Celebrating A Healthier Halloween

With Halloween right around the corner, it's time to start thinking about what treats you're going to hand out to the tots.

Should you let the kids have the sugar that they're expecting and hoping for or should you be the house on the block with the healthy stuff?

According to the Alliance for a Healthier Generation, a joint initiative of the American Heart Association and the William J. Clinton Foundation, you may want to pick the healthy stuff as today's generation of children may become the first in American history to live shorter lives than their parents.

Many kids today are suffering from "adult problems" such as high blood pressure, Type 2 diabetes and high cholesterol.

To help prevent those diseases and teach your children how to make healthier food choices, consider these tips to keep the ghosts and goblins a little healthier along the way, and Happy Halloween!

1. Feed 'em First — make sure your kids are fueled up before they go trick-or-treating with a healthy snack or meal, so they don't dip into their treats.

2. Pillow Cases are for Pillows — give the kids smaller treat bags like recycled grocery bags so they won't bring home too many sweets, and keep the pillow cases and trash bags at home!

3. Surprise 'em with Health, not Horror — Be the healthy house on the block by offering treats like prepackaged snack-sized dried fruit, pretzels, or baby carrots.

4. Give 'em Treasures for Treats — Hand out boxes of crayons, stickers, colored pencils, erasers, Halloween tattoos (the removable kind!), or rubber spiders!

5. Patrol Those Treats — After inspecting all treats to make sure they're safe, remind the kids to eat their treats in moderation, so they last longer (wink, wink). Store the bag in a high but public place so you won't be tempted to snack on the candy either!

A New Look At Diabetes And Vision

(NAPSA)—People with diabetes know well that healthy diet, exercise and regular glucose monitoring are essential for reducing the risk of serious, even life-threatening complications.

But for people with diabetes and vision loss—a common side effect of advanced diabetes—there's yet another level of complication and risk added to a patient's treatment regimen. If you are one of the 3 million Americans now living with both conditions, there is a new guide from the American Foundation for the Blind (AFB) to help you manage your health safely and effectively.

The guide, available at www.afb.org/seniorsite, addresses the health issues facing people with diabetes and vision loss, such as diet, exercise and monitoring blood glucose levels. The good news is that with the help of specially trained health professionals, you can learn the skills to independently manage your diabetes. Some of these tips include:

Eat smart. Healthy eating is where all diabetes care begins. Controlling carbohydrates and fats, using whole grains and eating plenty of fresh vegetables are familiar guidelines to most people living with diabetes. If you also have vision loss, you can learn adaptive techniques for grocery shopping and preparing meals, and giving special attention to measuring portion sizes accurately.

Stay active. Regular physical activity is essential to diabetes management. It helps keep heart and blood vessels healthy, can help prevent diabetes-related complications and can help to keep blood glucose levels near normal. Many physical activities can be adapted and enjoyed by people with vision loss, including walking, dancing, gardening, swimming and tandem biking. Remember to talk to your doctor before starting an exercise program.

Monitor your health. When managing diabetes, your good health depends on your ability to both monitor and understand your blood sugar, as well as your blood pressure, weight and body temperature. If you have vision loss, consider investing in large-print or talking blood glucose meters, blood pressure monitors, thermometers and weight scales.

Manage your medication. Medication management is one of the earliest obstacles that people with vision loss must confront in order to continue living independently. Most people are able to address these issues by adopting a few new skills that apply to everything from taking aspirin for a headache to measuring insulin.

Regular physical activity is essential to diabetes management. Fortunately, many physical activities can be adapted and enjoyed by people with vision loss.

DENTISTRY for the 21st Century

by Steven A. Brustlin, D.M.D.

D FOR DENTAL HEALTH

It seems that recent research has found that vitamin D confers more health benefits than was once thought. The most recent finding shows that babies born to mothers with low vitamin D levels may be at increased risk for tooth enamel defects and early childhood decay. This is important because researchers found that only 10.5 percent of the women studied during their second trimester of pregnancy had adequate vitamin D levels. With this study in mind, women of childbearing age may want to be sure that they are eating foods that are rich in nutrients, including vitamin D. If necessary, supplemental vitamins/minerals may be considered, always keeping daily recommendations and intake limits in mind. Vitamin D is necessary for the intestines to absorb dietary calcium. Vitamin D comes from food and is also produced by the skin upon exposure to sunlight. We want to help you. Please call us at 617-479-6220 to schedule an appointment for the highest quality dental treatment in a warm and caring environment. We're located at 44 Greenleaf Street, where you will receive a professional exam to detect and address any existing or impending oral health problems. Learning everything you can about your options, risks and benefits, is the key to making an informed decision. We offer the services of anesthesiology with a fully trained and qualified anesthesiologist. Visit us on the web at www.quincydentist.com.

P.S. Numerous studies indicate that vitamin D and calcium deficiencies result in bone loss and increased inflammation, which is a well-recognized symptom of periodontal diseases.

Discover The Link Between Pain And Poor Sleep

(ARA)—There is no overstating the value of a good night's sleep. Rejuvenating, uninterrupted rest delivers a host of health benefits, from re-energizing you for the day ahead to relieving many forms of pain.

Whether pain stems from arthritis, injury, surgery or chronic disease, it is so inextricably linked with sleep deprivation that these conditions often feed each other, experts say. The less sleep you get, the more pain you may feel. The more pain you experience, the less likely you are to get a good night's rest. Conversely, undisturbed slumber for the recommended number of hours seems to reduce pain for many people.

"According to Tempur-Pedic's 2008 Night-time Renewal Survey, 94 percent of Americans say that a good night's sleep results in them feeling less neck and back pain the next day," says Dr. Barry Bittman, neurologist, chief executive officer of the Mind-Body Wellness Center and member of Tempur-Pedic's Wellness Advisory Board. "And more than 93 percent of Americans agree that quality sleep is an integral part of a healthy lifestyle."

Bittman advises that if pain is disrupting your rest, seek help. "A rational approach includes comprehensive medical evaluations that address both the pain and the inability to get quality sleep. Healthy lifestyle changes with a focus on nutrition, exercise and stress reduction can make a world of difference for many individuals. Sleeping on a bed that enables you to enjoy a restorative night's sleep can also help break the pain/sleeplessness cycle."

Fortunately, there are many ways you can help improve your rest. In its Web-based "Ask the Expert" column, the National Sleep Foundation offers the following tips:

- * Curtail caffeine consumption. "It's not just a wives' tale — caffeine really is a stimulant that can interfere with sleep," Bittman says. "Reduce your intake throughout the day and especially avoid caffeine in the hours prior to bedtime."

- * Limit alcohol consumption and avoid it altogether in the evening. "Even moderate alcohol consumption can act as a stimulant that disrupts sleep," Bittman says.

- * Avoid vigorous exercise just before bedtime. "For many people, exercise is far more beneficial if performed earlier in the day," Bittman says.

- * Don't nap too long in the afternoon — no more than 10 to 20 minutes. "Short naps can be very beneficial," Bittman says. "But long naps during the day may actually make it harder to fall asleep at night."

- * Practice relaxation techniques like deep breathing and meditation.

"I would also add that if you're sleeping on an old, uncomfortable mattress, or one with any dips or body impressions, replace it," Bittman says. "Mattresses that offer gentle support to your entire body can relieve pressure, stiffness and ultimately pain for many people."

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) A bid for you to step in and take over an incomplete project could prove to be an excellent learning experience that you can take with you when a new opportunity opens up.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) It's a good time for socializing, both with family and with friends. Your aspects also favor developing new relationships, any or all of which might become especially meaningful.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Watch that you don't take on more than you can handle when offering to help someone with a personal problem. There might be hidden factors you weren't told about.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) That major move you've been considering could come sooner than you expected. Make sure you'll be ready with the facts you need when decision time arrives.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) Language relationships can benefit from a break in routine. Get out of the rut and do something new and maybe more than a little unpredictable this weekend.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) Although you don't think of yourself as a role model, your ability to make a tough decision at this time sets an example for others, whom admire your courage.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You need to move any remaining obstacles out of your way before you can take on a new challenge. Seek advice from close, trusted friends and associates.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) A career change appears increasingly likely to happen during the next several weeks. It's a good idea to start now to prepare, so you can be ready to make the move when the time comes.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

SCOTT DEWARE

In planning your estate, how can you set a fixed amount for your funeral costs - thus assuring that your heirs won't spend more than you would consider reasonable for such services?

One answer appears to be in pre-need or 'advance' plans. Today, pre-need plans are an important part of the funeral business. These plans can be used anywhere in the country and are fully protected. There are several advantages to a pre-need plan. One of the main advantages, of course, is to 'lock in' the expenses of funeral arrangements. A person who purchases a plan at today's costs can be assured that funeral services at the same level and quality will be supplied at the time of death, even if that is many years into the future.

If considering advanced planning or inquiring about funeral service options, we at the Deware Funeral Home are available at any time to talk to you about the options. And remember the decisions will be yours. Satisfying your needs and desires is always our main consideration. We will answer all questions honestly and frankly and in the strictest of confidence. At no obligation, of course...

Quincy Credit Union Sponsors City Tournament Tennis Champs Crowned

Tennis anyone?

At the beginning of every fall for the last 38 years Quincy's best tennis players have come together to determine who will be crowned City Champion in eleven events including a city employee division.

The annual tennis tournament, sponsored by the Quincy Recreation Department and the Quincy Credit Union, the tournament brings together young and old, families, past champions and first-time entries. After two beautiful weeks of weather and over 150 matches played, the championships have been won and the trophies have been awarded.

It was familiar scene in the Women's Singles finals as Patrice Sullivan and Phoebe Chan met once again in the finals. Both women had three Women's Singles titles on their resumes heading into the match; Sullivan was victorious: 6-4, 6-4. She joins Pam Trafton and Elizabeth Ryan as the most successful competitors in the Women's Singles event, each with four titles.

Chan made her way to finals by defeating Kathy

Brennan, 7-5, 4-6, 6-1, in an exciting three-match semifinal.

In the Men's Singles finals, John Zarnoch, a tournament veteran, won the Lionel "Shine" Buckley Bowl with a, 6-0, 6-2, win over Abhijit Dhdre. Zarnoch had earned his spot in the championship with a, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4, victory over Joseph Holland in the semifinals.

Joseph Del Rosso captured the Men's 50 and Over title with a, 7-6, 6-1, victory over tournament veteran Bill Eaton. Del Rosso defeated Paul Daikos, 6-4, 6-2, in one semifinal while Eaton knocked off Ken Tarabelli, 6-4, 6-2, in the other semifinal match.

Del Rosso was presented with the Richard Meade bowl from Tournament Director John Franceschini after his win in the finals.

For the third year in a row, Patrice Sullivan and Helen Mao squared off in the finals of the Women's 35 and Over Singles event. In one of the most competitive matches of the tournament, Mao won 1-6, 6-4, 7-5; earning her second Women's 35 and Over title.

In the Men's 35 and Over final, newcomer Matt Donatelle defeated John Zarnoch, 6-3, 6-2, to pick up his first City Championship title. Donatelle defeated four-time champion Victor Luzarraga, 6-2, 6-2, in one semifinal match and Zarnoch beat Job Chan, a past champion, 6-0, 6-1, in the other semifinal match.

The mother-daughter pairing of Aileen and Jacquelyn Eleey defeated Francesca DiBona and Trang Vo, 6-3, 6-0, in the Women's Doubles Team finals; in the process the Eleeys tied the team of Chris Cuniff and Sue Coleman, who played back in the 1970s, with four champions, for most all-time in this annual event.

The championship was the twelfth and eight consecutive for Aileen Eleey and the fourth title for Jacquelyn Eleey.

In the Men's Doubles finals, the team of Victor Luzarraga and John Zarnoch, the 2005 City Champions in this event, defeated the team of Bryan Pinero and Alex Linardi, tournament rookies, 6-0, 6-2 to recapture The Henry McAulfee Bowl.

Pinero and Linardi had defeated the #2 seed of Matt Thoi and Job Chan, 4-6, 7-5, 6-4, in the semifinals to make it to the championship match.

In the City's Employee final, Peter Dionne, Bernazzani Elementary School Principal, defeated Jack Goddard of the Quincy Fire Department, 6-0, 6-0.

Bryan Pinero defeated tournament veteran Kadirvel Subramaniam, 6-4, 6-0, 6-4, to win the Men's "B" Singles championship.

Ron Abell and Aileen Eleey defeated Victor Luzarraga and Helen Mao, 6-1, 6-0, to the Mixed Doubles finals. Abell and Eleey, as the champions, were awarded the William F. Ryan Bowl.

In the 16 and Under finals, both Dallana Wijesundera and Elizabeth Sullivan defended their 2007 titles in the Boys' and Girls' 16 and Under Singles, respectively. Wijesundera defeated Peter Lieu, 6-0, 6-1, and Sullivan defeated Dora Pepo, 6-1, 6-1.

Barry Welch, Director of Recreation, had high praise for tournament director John Franceschini, a veteran of more than 30 years.

"With the influx of new players, John did an outstanding job on the tournament draw. The draw made for a fun filled yet competitive tournament."

Welch also acknowledged the job done by Michelle Hanly for her management of the times and days of the over 150 matches played. Hanly has co-directed the event for over 10 years.

"I would also like to thank the Quincy Credit Union for the past 13 years they have served as our sponsor," added Welch. "Without their sponsorship we would not be able to carry on the tournament. This is a long standing Quincy tradition that involves youth and families and greatly contributes to the fabric of our community. Their generosity is sincerely appreciated."

Welch presented each finalist and champion with a plaque for his or her achievement at this year's event. There is a permanent Bowl for each event on which the Champions names are engraved. The Bowls remain on year-round display in the Quincy Recreation Department offices.

MAYOR THOMAS KOCH answers questions from city councillors Monday after delivering the State of the City address.

Koch: 'We're In Decent Shape - Not Great Shape'

City Tightening Financial Belt

By LAURA GRIFFIN
Financial turmoil is rocking cities and towns across the state and nation, but the crisis has not struck Quincy... yet, according to Mayor Thomas Koch who warned Monday that, next year, finances will likely deteriorate.

"Our revenues and expenditures are right in line," Koch said but the city is on high alert.

"We know the situation is fluid," Koch said, noting that the administration is tightening the budget belt, checking revenues and watching for changes weekly.

Koch outlined the city's financial situation during his State of the City address at City Council Monday.

"We're in decent shape. We're not in great shape," Koch said noting later that the city's growth at $3 million to $3.5 million is "not as healthy" as expected and will not reach an estimated $5 million mark.

However, the foreclosure crisis has not damaged city finances substantially and residents have been paying their taxes and water and sewer bills.

While there have been 64 foreclosures within the city, most have been taken by banks, according to Koch who said only a handful are in tax title. "This has not had a major impact."

Koch said that finances appear fairly stable for the balance of this fiscal year, thanks to the anticipated state aid, savings on trash collection, and a tight city budget.

In addition, Koch said he has directed department heads to review their budgets, and cut or eliminate capital purchases, such as vehicles and equipment.

"All the capital purchases es have been put off," said Koch. As an example, he said the city will not purchase the nine police cruisers budgeted for this year.

Koch said he will not order a hiring freeze, but will scrutinize all new hires. "We're filling positions. We don't believe a hiring freeze makes sense."

"The core services are what we are keeping in mind," said Koch who said that the city is not currently filling an opening for Shellfish Warden, but will likely hire firefighters for the fire department.

Three Free Flu Clinics Slated For November

The Quincy Health Department and the Quincy Medical Center are gearing up for their annual struggle with that old wintertime enemy, the flu.

The Health Department has already set up three public flu clinics to administer vaccine to just about everyone over the age of 18 free of charge. The schedule:

Sunday, Nov. 9, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Wollaston School, 205 Beale St., Wollaston.

Wednesday, Nov. 19, from 9:30 to 11 a.m. at the Elks Lodge, 254 Quarry St., West Quincy.

Friday, Nov. 21, from 9:30 to 11 a.m. at St. Thomas Aquinas Hall on Darrow Street, Houghs Neck.

Those more than 65 years of age should bring their Medicare B or other insurance cards since the city will be reimbursed for the cost of their shots.

"Don't worry. There's plenty of vaccine to go around," said Health Commissioner Drew Scheele. "I expect a busy season, as far as shots go, anyway."

The Center for Disease

Control (CDC) has decided on a new approach, said Scheele, under which everyone will be vaccinated except those under 18, who will get their shots from their pediatricians/

Scheele as well as Dolly Darcy and Sharon Giordani, nurses at Quincy Medical Center, recommend that the best way to avoid the flu is the annual flu shot "and wash your hands --- a lot."

"It is a good idea to get a flu shot as soon as they are available, which is right now," said Darcy.

"Getting the vaccine early provides protection throughout the flu season which can stretch into the spring. But even if you get a shot later in the season, it will still provide some protection."

Giordani warned that individual sufferer could start to infect others the day before symptoms develop before they even know they are sick themselves.

"I would encourage everyone, in addition to the being vaccinated, to practice frequent hand washing to decrease your chances of getting the flu as well as colds and other illnesses."

"And if you are sick with a cold or flu, try to reduce your contact with others and cover your coughs and sneezes with the crook of your arm or with a tissue to help keep germs from spreading."

Darcy and Giordani provide primary care services at the Boston University Medical Group at Quincy Medical Center on Wednesday evenings.

Purchaser Found For Blighted Fruit Stand

The dilapidated onetime fruit stand at 441 Quincy Ave., Quincy Point, that is a prime candidate for the wrecking ball, has come under a developer's purchase and sale agreement.

"I pointed out to him the danger the building is to the roadway," said Ward 2 City Councillor Daniel Raymondi, who last week filed a resolution supporting its demolition.

The prospective buyer of the property, which is owned by a trust, was not identified, except to say he is not a major developer but has been involved in local development before.

Raymondi's resolution, which was erroneously credited to Ward 4 City Councillor Jay Davis in last week's Quincy Sun, calls on the Inspectional Services Director and Code Enforcement Officer to take steps to have the building razed.

"The Building Inspector has been terrific," said

Raymondi. "I intend to keep the pressure on until the building and the two old billboards on the property are gone."

Raymondi's resolution describes the building as "an eyesore within our city that detracts from other properties . . . in a major gateway in and out of the city of Quincy."

The 58-year-old wooden building has been designated a hazard by acting Fire Chief Joseph Barron.

Mayor's Finance Reform Gets 5-4 Council Green Light

The City Council has approved Mayor Thomas Koch's plans to create a centralized finance department in a move, he says, that will pave the way for one of the most substantial government reforms in recent years.

The new Department of Municipal Finance will become the nerve center of the city's fiscal operations, with responsibilities ranging from paying bills, reviewing contracts, managing budgets to tracking revenues and a series of other duties. Currently, those duties are spread among a series of different departments.

Koch said the goal of the new department, which includes only one new job and will cost limited additional money, will dramatically improve efficiency and accountability within the city's $230 million financial operation. Ultimately, greater accountability will mean better service and savings for taxpayers, he said.

"We are committed changing the way City Hall does business, and this is a huge step toward ensuring our city stays on solid ground financially," Koch said after the meeting. "I wish to thank the City Council for its continuing desire to work together on important issues like this."

The Council voted 5-4 to approve the new department after several hours of debate over the course of multiple meetings. Councilors debated more than a dozen amendments to the proposal, most of which were agreed to by the administration.

Voting for it were John Keenan, Kevin Coughlin, Leo Kelly, Michael McFarland and Brian McNamee. Voting against it were Joseph Finn, Douglas Gutro, Dan Raymond and City Council President Jay Davis.

The plan includes reorganizing existing financial departments by shifting many of the duties currently performed by the City Auditor to the new department. Traditionally, the City Auditor, a job appointed by the City Council, has performed duties far beyond what would be considered the function of an auditor.

Under Koch's proposal, the City Auditor position will maintain its oversight function under the jurisdiction of the City Council.

"By changing responsibilities, the Auditor's oversight capacity will be greatly enhanced," Koch said. "The check on the administration will always be there, and I look forward to working with the Council's appointment."

Koch's proposal is one of several since he took office in January in an effort to make City Hall

more "efficient, responsive and accountable." The former Department of Constituent Services is now part of the Mayor's Office, a cost-saving trash collection contract is in effect, and the mayor shifted responsibility for public buildings and major projects outside of the Department of Public Works into its own department. To date, the reorganization efforts have required little new investment, instead focusing on using existing resources in different ways, Koch said.

Planning for the new department will begin immediately, Koch said.

THE HISTORY CHANNEL

• On Oct. 21, 1797, the USS Constitution, a 44-gun U.S. Navy frigate, is launched in Boston Harbor. During the War of 1812, the Constitution won its enduring nickname "Old Ironsides" after defeating the British warship Guerriere off the coast of Nova Scotia.

• On Oct. 24, 1901, 63-year-old schoolteacher Annie Edson Taylor, strapped for cash and seeking fame, becomes the first person to take the plunge over Niagara Falls in a barrel. Taylor's brief fame cooled, and she was unable to make the fortune for which she had hoped.

• On Oct. 20, 1930, the "Sherlock Holmes" program debuts on the radio starring William Gillette as Holmes. In 1939, Basil Rathbone took on the part, with Nigel Bruce as Watson. Rathbone and Bruce stayed with the radio show until 1946, during which time they also starred in some 16 Sherlock Holmes movies.

• On Oct. 26, 1942, the last U.S. aircraft carrier manufactured before America's entry into World War II, the Hornet, is damaged so extensively by Japanese warplanes in the Battle of Santa Cruz that it must be abandoned. More than 25 of the 27 Japanese bombers that attacked the Hornet were also lost in the battle.

• On Oct. 22, 1975, Air Force Sgt. Leonard Matlovich, a decorated veteran of the Vietnam War, is given a "general" discharge by the Air Force after publicly declaring his homosexuality. In 1979, after winning a much-publicized case against the Air Force, his discharge was upgraded to "honorable."

• On Oct. 23, 1983, a suicide bomber drives a truck packed with explosives into the U.S. Marine barracks in Beirut, Lebanon, killing 241 U.S. military personnel.

• On Oct. 25, 1994, Susan Smith of South Carolina reports that she was carjacked by a man who took off with her two children in the backseat. Nine days later, Smith confessed that she had driven her car into a lake to drown her children so she could continue her affair with a man who did not want children.

Once A Quincyite . . .

As we have said before, once a Quincyite always a Quincyite.

Those of us, who were lucky enough to grow up in Quincy, remain a Quincyite regardless of where life takes us.

I was reminded of this while working on The Sun's 40th anniversary supplement that appears in this week's issue.

And wondering how many people will be receiving it out of state.

We checked and found that approximately 350-most of them-if not all-former Quincy residents who are receiving The Sun weekly by mail. One of them in Alaska. Two in Hawaii. And one in Iraq, who has just returned home.

Florida tops the out-of-state number with 85. California is runner-up with 37. Next come New Hampshire (29), New York (20), Maine (16), Texas (15), Virginia (14), Arizona and New Jersey (10).

The remainder are scattered thusly:

Georgia (9), Maryland, North Carolina and Pennsylvania (8), Illinois (7), Washington and Rhode Island (6), Kentucky and South Carolina (5); Ohio, Vermont, Tennessee and Connecticut (4), Colorado (3), Washington, D.C., Indiana, Michigan, Mississippi (2), Iowa, Idaho, Louisiana, North Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Oregon (1).

Maybe a former neighbor of your's is among them.

While most of us who grew up here, stay here or close by, some move out of the area for one reason or another but never seem to forget their Quincy roots.

Actress Ruth Gordon, one of Quincy's most famous daughters, received The Sun by mail at her New York City apartment. And read it closely.

She didn't miss much. We got to be good friends and whenever she called to say hello, she would mention something like this: "Well, I see your (The Sun) hockey team got beat by Burgin Platner."

When she died in 1985, her husband, playwright Garson Kanin, called to tell me of her death and said: "You were her Quincy connection."

At subscription renewal time we often get a note from the out-of-state subscribers. Like these recent ones:

Kathy Rowe, Leesburg, FL: "I have been away for two years and I still miss Quincy like crazy. Thanks for the opportunity to keep up with what's going on."

"I really look forward to my copies of The Sun. When they arrive it's like a visit from an old friend."

Muriel Burnhauser, Cumming, GA: "The Sun brings me back to my roots. Thank you."

Charlotte DiTullio, South Pittsburg, Tenn: "Thank you. We look forward to receiving The Sun each week to keep up with what is going on in Quincy!"

Thank you for the kind words.

They may be out of state but their hearts are still very much in Quincy.

A FEW COLUMNS back on City Council trivia we noted that former Mayor James Sheets had served the longest as ward councillor-16 in the Ward 4 seat.

Well, that was the longest for quite awhile, but Frank McCauley reminds us that the longevity honor now belongs to Dan Raymondi.

RAYMONDI

Raymondi took the record a couple of years ago and will hit the 20-year mark at the end of his current 10th two-year term.

But Sheets still holds the consecutive record with his 16 years. Raymondi's terms are broken with service as Norfolk County treasurer in between. He has also served eight years on the school committee.

CITY CLERK Joseph Shea, among his other duties, is the caretaker of the photographs of various city councils.

One of them is the very first council of 1888-89, which had 24 members. Wonder how long those council meetings took?

There is one of the 1913 council; the year Quincy celebrated its 25th anniversary as a city. Joseph Whiton was president of that council and went on to become mayor.

There is also the 1925 council, which produced three mayors: Charles Ross, who was council president; Thomas Burgin and Thomas McGrath. Three political heavyweights and rivals.

The 1970-71 photo shows two future mayors-Arthur Tobin and Walter Hannon. And a future Norfolk County sheriff, Clifford Marshall.

THE PRESIDENTIAL election is just 12 days away and Maralin Manning, executive director of the Quincy Business Association thinks it's an appropriate time for a little food-for-thought:

"You cannot help the poor by destroying the rich."

"You cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong."

"You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift."

"You cannot lift the wage earner up by pulling the wage payer down."

"You cannot further the brotherhood of man, by inciting class hatred."

"You cannot build character and courage by taking away men's initiative and independence."

"You cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves."

(The words of Abraham Lincoln.)

Something to think about.

Prison Book Program To Be Explained At Oct. 25 Meeting

The Prison Book Program will host an open house Saturday, Oct. 25, from 2 to 4 p.m. at United First Parish Church, 1306 Hancock St., Quincy Center, to explain its mission to send free books to prison inmates.

Bruce Western, a professor of sociology at Harvard, will speak on education in the prison system and its effect on the community.

Prior to his talk, visitors will be able to tour the program's library, view prisoner requests and artwork, enjoy light refreshments and socialize while listening to the music of the Adam Lasher Band.

The Prison Book Program is an all-volunteer non-profit that provides prisoners with free reading materials to improve the lives and communities of prisoners and reduce the likelihood of their return to prison.

Last year, the program sent more than 10,000 books to prisoners in 46 states.

weighed over 100 tons. Passenger train service to this ground level Quincy Depot began in 1845 and ended in 1959 when the Southeast Expressway opened. The present station here was built in 1970 below grade for the rapid transit Red Line, but since 1997 it has once again become a stop on the new Old Colony Line. A Quincy Parents Urges Yes Vote On Question 2

As a former first assistant attorney general, a practicing attorney for 38 years, a resident of Quincy since early childhood and a father of three, I've dedicated my working life to creating a safer and more just Massachusetts. And that's exactly what Question 2 will do.

Question 2 creates a civil penalty system for personal possession of an ounce or less of marijuana. It replaces arrest and booking with a citation and fine similar to a speeding ticket, and it ends the creation of permanent arrest records known as Criminal Offender Record Information (CORI) reports.

Results resulting from the 7,500 low-level marijuana arrests conducted each year cost individuals their ability to get a job, obtain housing, get a loan to go to school, adopt children, get bank loans and many other means to becoming productive members of their families and communities.

Marijuana remains illegal under Question 2, and all related laws – including laws banning sales, distribution and trafficking – remain unchanged. Additionally, Question 2 in no way affects laws or regulations prohibiting driving under the influence or workplace intoxication.

Question 2 also takes a more proactive approach to juveniles than current law. Persons under 18 will have the citation delivered to a parent or guardian, and young people must complete a drug awareness program and community service – so there are immediate, family-based and appropriate consequences to their actions.

Eleven other states have enacted similar laws without the sky falling. In fact, in a study commissioned by the White House, the National Research Council found that there is no significant difference in the prevalence of marijuana use between the 11 states with laws similar to Question 2 and the rest of the country.

Our failed policy also comes with a large price tag. According to Harvard economist Dr. Jeffrey Miron, Question 2 will save taxpayers almost $30 million a year in arrest, booking and basic court costs alone. Question 2 will keep these funds where they belong – in community coffers to fight violent, serious crimes. Additionally, all fines generated will stay in the community where the offense occurred.

Question 2 is a good, modest public policy proposal that will improve our laws, conserve taxpayer resources, and remove these outrageous lifelong penalties. While I invite all my fellow Bay Staters to join me in voting yes on Question 2 this November, this message is aimed particularly to the City of Presidents – and the Red Raiders.

For decades I've been representing your sons and daughters as they deal with the minor legal scrapes that are a part of being young. None of them deserve the lifelong consequences they face under the current system for possession of marijuana.

Believe me, you can do a better job than the state dealing with that problem.

Criticizes Reader Who Criticized Appointment

Regarding Susan Lynn's Taxpayer, Quincy Letter, Criticizes Appointment. She states that Mr. Tufo is the lucky grandson of a former attorney general, nephew and son of others in position or in the past.

I would like Susan Lynn to think for a moment. How lucky is he? His dad died tragically. You are so insensitive to write such a letter. You need to take a class in sensitivity. Neither you or I have the right to judge his ability to perform his job.

Let him do it, let him prove himself to be a dedicated employee and follow the footsteps of his father who everybody speaks so fondly of.

He showed respect to many people. So I'm really just floored that you call him lucky. How lucky is that to lose someone you love? And another point I'd like to make to you is that I worked in Boston for the Commonwealth and I didn't need a college degree and

I did not have any connections to the big government or a local government; furthermore do you see the size of this young man. I think he fits the job description. So to you please don't be bitter. Wish him luck! And God Bless!

By FRANK MCCAULEY

A citywide petition drive is underway to have the City Council amend the zoning ordinances to keep the Wollaston Golf Course as "open space."

The effort is spearheaded by the Montclair Men's Club and Quincy citizens who have proposed the golf club be taken over by the Metropolitan District Commission as an MDC Golf Club in order to retain the "open space."

DRUG PROBLEM VERY SERIOUS

Quincy's drug problem has now reached the "very serious" stage according to Norfolk County District Attorney George G. Burke.

The county's chief law enforcement officer last night in an interview with The Quincy Sun said that:

Drug use in high schools is "sharply increasing."

A "tremendous amount" of heroin is present in the city and is being used by teenagers. "We have a very serious problem here in Quincy," Burke declared. "Our office has been receiving numerous reports from concerned mothers and fathers and youths, too."

Burke said that he hoped that proponents of Survival, Inc. will work together with other interested parties.

Josiah Quincy House Pruning Saturday

The Wollaston Garden Club and Historic New England will have a morning of pruning shrubs at the Josiah Quincy House, 20 Muirhead St. Saturday from 9 to 11:30 a.m.

Although both organizations have volunteers participating, they are still seeking more volunteers.

The garden club's civic beautification committee headed by Jo Costello, and Historic New England will be planting a four-season garden in the spring.

Led by master gardener Cynthia Lewis, the pruning teams will work to sculpt each shrub into its natural shape.

Tours of the house will be provided by Leah Walczak, site manager of the property.

Refreshments will be available.

Volunteers are asked to dress with long sleeve shirts and pants and to wear gloves. Also to bring pruning tools if you have them.

Carla O'Connor Receives Girl Scout Distinction Award

Girl Scouts of the USA has named Quincy Girl Scout Carla O'Connor as one of America's top ten Girl Scout Gold Award recipients for its 2008 National Young Women of Distinction for extraordinary leadership demonstrated through their remarkable community action projects.

O'Connor has been active in Girl Scouting for over 13 years. She is a recipient of both the Girl Scout Silver Award for completing a literacy project in the Wollaston community and earned her Girl Scout Gold Award for creating and implementing Embrace Your Diversity-The Wellness Group at North Quincy High School. She was the first Girl Scout in Quincy to earn the Girl Scout Gold Award.

For O'Connor's Girl Scout Gold Award, she wanted to help young people overcome their disabilities. She started Embrace Your Diversity-The Wellness Group, a forum for high school students who are at risk of failing or having difficulty succeeding in high school. Members of the group learn coping and life skills in a safe environment which also allows them to talk about the problems they may be experiencing.

O'Connor arranged for an array of experts to speak to the group while also leading a team of the school's nursing staff, guidance staff and a psychologist. Embrace Your Diversity-The Wellness Group is now a permanent program through the school's guidance department.

In 2007 Carla was the recipient of the Tomorrow 25 International Leadership Award given by Bentley

College in conjunction with Time Magazine. This award was earned in part due to her extensive leadership and community work within the Girl Scouts as well as other service endeavors at school and in the community, including coaching five year olds with Quincy Youth Soccer, working at Interfaith Social Services, the American Red Cross and many other worthy causes in the community.

Now a freshman at Bentley University, O'Connor is the recipient of Bentley's Service Learning Scholarship where she is using her leadership abilities along with her love of service to managing service projects in the community. She is also a staff writer for Bentley's Vanguard Newspaper and Media Manager for the Quincy Girl Scouts. Ms. O'Connor continues her work with the Girl Scouts working on several older girl workshops for Girl Scouts of Eastern Massachusetts Council, which she will be running during her semester break.

Fontbonne Academy is Proud of Maureen Aiello '04

Maureen Aiello graduated cum laude from Georgetown University in 2008 with a double major in finance and marketing. She has studied at the University of Sydney, volunteered as a tax preparer for low-income residents, and interned at Georgetown's MBA Career Management. She participated in the National Student Advertising Competition and is now employed at DDB, an advertising agency in New York City.

"At Fontbonne, I was taught to believe that anyone can change the world. As part of my senior social justice project, I worked with a friend to organize a pancake breakfast that raised several hundred dollars for pancreatic cancer and HIV/AIDS research. Fontbonne is unique in that it provides an environment where students are encouraged to care for others, and in doing so, mature and grow into responsible and compassionate young women. Fontbonne doesn't just preach; it leads by example. The values I learned at Fontbonne still influence how I live my life."

Council Votes

REO Committee Investigating QHS Contractor Complaints

By LAURA GRIFFIN

City Council Monday voted unanimously to investigate charges that a contractor on the $126 million Quincy High School project failed to comply with the city's Responsible Employer Ordinance (REO).

The council voted on the recommendation of the Oversight Committee headed by Ward 6 Councillor Brian McNamee who said the city was charting "new waters."

"This is precedent-setting," said Michael Cheney, consultant to the South Shore Building Trades Council, as councillors discussed penalties.

Cheney who spoke at the committee meeting formerly served as councillor at large. Cheney and Karen Courtney, Director of The Foundation For Fair Contracting of Massachusetts, urged councillors to act firmly on any violations of the city's REO and not with just a "slap on the wrist."

REO's are standard agreements required by most cities and towns on public works projects. Employees guarantee such items as minimal wage requirements and health benefits.

Quincy's REO requires contractors to hire residents and provide positions for apprentices.

D'Agostino Associates was originally accused of not hiring residents and "failing to fill the apprenticeship to journeyman ratio for each trade employed."

The REO Compliance Committee headed by Tom Fabrizio investigated the complaints, cleared D'Agostino of one charge and found D'Agostino "is failing to fill the apprenticeship to journeyman ratio for each trade employed."

"This is the first time we've have had a report of this kind," McNamee said. "This is a very important issue."

"They have not employed one apprentice," Adam J.

Lupino of the Laborers' New England Region Organizing Fund. "You have a great REO, a top ordinance. It's really simply the will to enforce."

If City Council does enforce the REO, it will one of the first and few instances, according to Cheney who said no one really enforces REO.

"They always find away around it," Cheney said of contractors who violate provisions of an REO. For most project managers, he said, the only concern is that a public works project be on time and on budget.

"We want our public works to be more than just building a building," said Courtney, then explained that the value of REO's, also, lies in providing "jobs for our adults" and "economic development."

Courtney, also, stated that the attorney general has supported penalties for violations of REO's. Union contractors sign compliance forms every week.

Delahunt Announces Foreclosure Assistance To South Shore

Cong. William Delahunt has announced the award of $109,565.48 in Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) grants to Community Action Programs (QCAP) and the Redevelopment Authority.

"With an economy in recession and ten million mortgages risk of foreclosure nationally, it is important that we take every step possible to help people stay in their homes," Delahunt said. "I am pleased that HUD funds will be put to use by local housing organizations that are working hard to help homeowners on that deal with this crisis."

WILLIAM DELAHUNT

As part of the grant award, QCAP will receive $57,065 and the Redevelopment Authority $52,500 under HUD's Housing Counseling Program.

QCAP Executive Director Beth Ann Strollo said, "HUD's award to QCAP is critical to assuring tenants and landlords can get the help they need to stem the tide of foreclosure and eviction."

Laura Schaefer, executive director of the Redevelopment Authority said "Now more than ever, housing counseling is imperative. We remain committed to the belief that informing and educating homebuyers and homeowners provides for more stable families and communities."

Meeting On Proposed Quarry Museum Nov. 5

The Quincy Quarry and Granite Workers Museum will hold an informational meeting on a proposed quarry museum Wednesday, Nov. 5 at 7 p.m. at the Ward 4 Community Center, 100 Brooks Ave.

This group plans to establish a museum, building to show the history of quarrying and the granite workers relationship to the industrialization and the ethnic diversity that the granite industry brought to the City of Quincy.

Archaeologist Richard Muzzrole will present a slide lecture on the first commercial railroad in America, the Granite Railway Company, and its relationship to the building of the Bunker Hill Monument. Muzzrole will also discuss the archeological work he undertook at the site in West Quincy.

Church Flag Burning Probed As Hate Crime

United First Parish Church is well-known for the welcome it extends to worshippers of all persuasions, particularly the bisexual, gay, lesbian and transgender communities.

Since 2004, a Rainbow Flag has flown over the church in Quincy Center as tangible evidence of that welcome.

Early birds arriving at the church on Saturday, Oct. 10, found the charred remains of the flag on the steps, the second such incident of vandalism in less than two months.

"It took considerable work to get at the flag," said the Rev. Sheldon Bennett, the pastor. "Whoever it was needed a stepladder to reach it.

"Who knows? It might have been a kid pulling a prank but it's still a hate crime. It's like painting a swastika on a synagogue."

Whatever, a day later, on Sunday, a new Rainbow Flag was flying over the church "and we will continue to fly the flag," vowed Bennett.

Police and the Quincy Human Rights Commission are investigating.

An earlier incident of vandalism involving the Rainbow Flag occurred late in August when the flag and its flagpole were stolen.

"There have been other times when the flag was knocked down," said Bennett, "but it might have been the wind. Someone had to be involved in those two incidents."

United First Parish Church stirred up a ruckus two years ago by displaying a banner "People of Faith for Marriage Equality" to protest a same sex marriage amendment proposed for the state constitution.

City Tightening Financial Belt

On the minus side, Koch cited the reduced growth as a sign of the times as real estate values decline and investments go dry.

While the health insurance fund registered a surplus this year, Koch said that employee health claims are up and the $2.7 million sewer and water fund deficit will squeeze the city's free cash and stabilization accounts.

Such actions should ease financial distress for now, but the future is uncertain, according to Koch who said, "We know we're in for rough waters."

Koch credited both Governor Deval Patrick and the city's legislators for protecting the state's local aid as a major factor in maintaining this year's budget balance. However, he believes that next year's state aid is likely to be slashed.

Patrick met last week with Koch and several city councillors and assured them that he will make every effort to maintain this year's local aid packages.

Several factors may reduce some pressure on next year's budget, according to Koch who said that trash collection costs are decreasing as residents' recycling increases and he anticipates a potential reduction of $4 million in health insurance costs.

RETIRE STATE TROOPER Linda Orlando (left), Norfolk County Dist. Atty. William Keating and attorney Erin McIntyre produced the substance of the training materials.

Children's Advocacy Center, DA Keating Provide Training On Stopping Sexual Abuse

Ten Quincy Police and school officials were among the hundred plus who joined Norfolk District Attorney William Keating to launch a new internet-based training program to help protect children from physical and sexual abuse and neglect.

The new web-based training on recognizing and reporting child abuse and neglect was developed by the Children's Advocacy Center of Norfolk County currently administered by Keating's office.

"The law changed this year to dictate that mandated child abuse reporters - including teachers and clinicians - acquire training in recognizing, responding and reporting on child abuse and neglect," District Attorney said.

"Our Children's Advocacy Center used grant funds and the expertise of a State Police sexual assault detective recently retired from our office and a former prosecutor in our sex assault, domestic violence and juvenile units to develop this training package," District Attorney Keating said. Those grant funds came from Gov. Deval Patrick's Executive Office of Public Safety and Security, Keating said.

"Children are living in abusive homes in every community in Massachusetts," Keating said. "The training that Trooper Linda Orlando and former ADA Erin McIntyre developed gives any mandated reporter the best available guidance on how to recognize and address children in this kind of danger and get them help," he added.

The Bank of Canton donated the use of the large auditorium at its Rte. 138 headquarters for the CAC event, Keating said "as it has generously done in the past."

A video of opening remarks of the conference can be viewed at www.norfolkda.com, and the training resource will soon be available through that site.

Quincy representatives at the training included Elizabeth Murphy and Sheri Eldridge from the High School, James Dentrement, Jennifer Tapper and Patrick Glynn from the Police Department, and Andra Rooney, Chris Karaska, Heather Holet, Kathleen Bakis and Kerry Bertrand from Quincy Public Schools, Jessica Carmer and Stephanie Flaherty from Dove, Inc., and Bobbie-Jo Dionne, Kristine Swan and Lauren Browning from the South Shore YMCA.

Central Middle School guidance counselor Maura Tenaglia was a panelist for the multi-disciplinary panel discussion that closed the event.

Mail Men, Women Key To Saturday Food Drive

It's Make a Difference Day 2008 on Saturday, Oct. 25, the sixth annual Holiday Food Drive to fill the food pantries around the city for those in need as Thanksgiving, Christmas and the New Year approach.

Letter carriers will pick up donations of non-perishable food left beside your mailbox for distribution to all participating food pantries in Quincy, including those of church and private organizations.

The food drive is sponsored by the city of Quincy, the U.S. Postal Service and the Quincy Hunger Network. The drive collected 15 tons of food last year, 40 tons since its inception six years ago.

Suggested items include cranberry sauce, turkey gravy, canned vegetables, pie filling, boxed stuffing and other non-perishables.

Volunteers are needed to transport food from the Quincy Post Offices to the Park and Recreation Facility at One Merrymount Parkway between the hours of 3:30 and 7:30 p.m. They should arrive at 2:30 p.m.

Volunteers also are needed to sort and package food for the pantries at One Merrymount Parkway and the individual organizations will need drivers to transport food to their pantries at the end of the day.

It is a great opportunity to help your community and for children of all ages to be part of the community and accumulate volunteer hours for school and other activities.

Braintree Waste Station Is Open To Quincy Residents

The Department of Public Works has negotiated a special rate for Quincy residents to dispose of household construction and demolition debris (C&D) at the Semass Covanta transfer station in Braintree.

State law prohibits the disposal of this material through the regular curbside collection.

Since Oct. 1, Quincy residents have been able to bring their household C&D to the transfer station at 257 Ivory St., across from the MBTA station in South Braintree, at a cost of 10 cents per pound, the same rate as professional contractors.

Previously, a minimum payment of $100 was collected from private citizens for up to three quarters of a ton no matter how light the debris may have weighed.

Mayor Thomas P. Koch said he feels the special rate will not only keep banned material from contaminating the solid waste stream but will save the city thousands of dollars in disposal fees and encourage homeowners to do the right thing.

Materials acceptable at the transfer station include:

Tubs, toilets, ceramic tile, paneling, particle board, wallboard, pressure treated lumber, timbers, composite decking materials, linoleum, carpet, floor tiles, bricks, rubble, concrete, asphalt shingles, fiberglass insulation, blow-in insulation, metal and plastic stock, electrical and plumbing debris.

None of the listed material will be accepted if it contains asbestos, PCBs or creosote. Fines will be applied. The special rate is for private citizens only. Commercial vendors and contractors are not eligible.

The Braintree transfer station is open to residents Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays from 7 a.m. to 12 noon. All payments must be made by credit card only.

FOOT NOTES

by Joel Chariton, D.P.M.
Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Surgery
Diplomate, American Board of Podiatric Orthopedics

DIABETES AND THE FOOT

The foot is especially affected by diabetes because problems can easily occur and not be detected. This nerve fiber damage is called peripheral neuropathy. Diabetic peripheral neuropathy can result in two types of problems. There can be a loss of ability to feel pain and other sensations, which puts the foot at risk of being damaged and the diabetic not realizing it. In addition, blood circulation is the body's way of healing damage, and poor circulation is a complication of diabetes that leaves the diabetic more vulnerable to infection. Foot ulcers are common, and healing is very slow. Extreme cases of nerve and foot disorders may lead to foot amputations. Regular monitoring by the doctor is necessary. It is estimated that 15 percent of all diabetics will develop a serious foot condition at some point, including infection, ulceration, or gangrene. As most cases of these conditions are preventable through regular visits to the podiatrist, we urge all diabetics to consider podiatric care as a very important component in managing their diabetic condition. We offer comprehensive foot care at QUINCY MEDICAL CENTER. Please call us here in Quincy at 781-986-3668 for an appointment. Office hours are also available at 999 North Main St., in the Randolph Medical Office Building, and Milton Medical Building in Suite 221. Diabetics - be sure to ask us about the Medicare Therapeutic Shoe Bill.

P.S. People with diabetes are five times more likely to develop peripheral neuropathy than the general population.

Faxon Field Track Plans To Be Presented At Public Meeting Nov. 3

Mayor Thomas Koch will present plans for a state-of-the-art track facility at Faxon Field next to the new Quincy High School at a public meeting Nov. 3 at 7 p.m. in the Quincy High School auditorium.

The mayor, city officials, and consultants from track designers Gale Associates will present its preliminary designs for a regulation-sized track at Faxon Field at a meeting of the Park and Recreation Board that will be held in the auditorium. There will be a question-and-answer session about the Faxon Field project following the presentation.

"This is going to be a facility the entire community will be proud of, and many people have put in an incredible amount of time to reach the point where we are ready to present the plan to the public," Koch said.

City Solicitor James Timmins will be available to answer legal questions, saying he is "very confident" about the project's future.

"It will also be our first opportunity to talk in detail about the project and address some of the misinformation spread by a few folks," Timmins said.

The Park and Recreation Board this spring voted to protect Pageant Field in Merrymount from construction of a track and subsequently voted to make Faxon Field the preferred site for the facility.

"I am proud that we have preserved Pageant Field, and I am looking forward to talking about what I know will be a first-class project adjacent to a brand new high school," Koch said.

3,000 Petition For Track At Pageant Field

Maureen Keeley Monday presented City Council with a petition signed by 3000 persons asking Mayor Thomas Koch to build the high school track at Pageant Field.

Keely heads a group of Pageant Field supporters called Parents for Pageant.

Keely asked councillors to reaffirm their previous support of the Pageant Field track site and reminded members that their vote last year funding a track project was site specific for Pageant Field only.

Several dozen parents joined Keeley at City Hall when she charged that the mayor's choice of Faxon Field for the track site had serious issues, including contamination problems.

FIRE SAFETY

by Captain Tom Lyons
Fire Prevention Bureau
Quincy Fire Department

Children, Lighters And Matches

A recent fire has prompted this article. The fire involved a young child playing with a lighter, igniting a barrel within the home. It was discovered quickly enough; we were called and fire personnel extinguished the fire.

Researching our concern for children playing with matches and lighters has retrieved memories of presentations I had given years ago to young, school-aged children within our school system. Those presentations now continue through another; this is an opportunity for me to reacquaint myself as well, with the State Fire Marshal's educational recommendations.

*In recent years, 912 juvenile-set fires were reported in Massachusetts at an estimated dollar loss of $9.5 million; children playing with matches and lighters started 54% of these fires. (*Fire Factors: Office of the State Fire Marshal)

Never allow children to play with lighters and matches. The State Fire Marshal reminds us that matches and lighters in a child's hands can be just as deadly as a loaded gun.

That is a pretty strong statement, one I was hesitant to pass along to you, but it is true. Lighting materials in the hands of an unsupervised child can lead and have led to fatalities within a family or those residents residing within the same building.

It only takes a few seconds for a fire to start and quickly burn out of control. Most children are not cognizant of that fact, nor will they be unless an adult brings this fact to their attention. We suggest that you remind them not to pick up matches. Inform children that matches and lighters are tools for adults, not toys for children. Praise them when they tell you they see matches and lighters and ask an adult to move them to a safe location out of the reach of other children.

How will they know without incident if we don't inform them? Children have a high curiosity quotient, and it seems to me that it is our responsibility as adults to set the boundaries to assure their safe use of that curiosity.

Keep all matches and lighters out of the reach of children. Store them in a high cabinet, preferably a locked one. Explain that fire is dangerous and only for grownups to use carefully. Set a good example when you, yourself, use matches, lighters, flammable liquids etc. Tell them when they are old enough that you will teach them how to use such tools safely and responsibly.

Thank you for doing so.

Council Closes Hearing On Lowe's

City councillors, acting as the Special Permit Granting Authority, voted 6-2 Monday to close the public hearing on a proposed Lowe's Home Improvement Center on Burgin Parkway.

Councillors now have 90 days to approve or reject a permit for the project.

Prior to the vote, Edward Fleming, attorney for Lowe's, described the concessions that Lowe's has made to improve the South

Quincy neighborhood.

Fleming, also, announced that Lowe's has agreed to tree plantings within its parking lot for 435 cars and will provide a parapet to screen roof equipment as requested on Oct. 5.

However, councillors still had questions regarding environmental issues, a proposed 50-foot sign and traffic, particularly from a Centre Street lot that is owned by Brewster Realty

Trust, the owners of all the Lowe's property.

Traffic Engineer Jack Gillan described potential traffic problems that could arise from the former Lincoln Monument property on Centre Street. Gillan predicted "turbulence" and "devastation" if any access is allowed from the Centre Street.

Councillor John Keenan stated he will not approve the Lowe's permit unless the company reduces its 50-foot sign and Brewster agrees to relinquish access to Centre Street.

Ward 3 Councillor Kevin Coughlin said he opposed closing the hearing because he wanted more open discussion on environmental issues while Ward 2 Councillor Daniel Raymondi said that he was open to more public discussion.

Councillor Michael McFarland has recused himself from all discussion and votes for personal reasons.

Presidential Wreath Set To Honor John Adams Oct. 30

The annual Presidential Wreath will be placed on the tomb of John Adams in the crypt of United First Parish Church in a special ceremony Thursday, Oct. 30, at 12 noon, commemorating his 273rd birthday.

The wreath will be placed by William A. Ballard, commander of the USS Constitution, and staff, while guest speakers reflect on the life and times of Adams, the second president of the United States, and the Navy Brass Ensemble of Newport, R.I., entertains.

Adams, a driving force in the movement for American independence, and his son, John Quincy Adams, the sixth president, and their wives all are entombed in what has come to be called the Church of the Presidents.

Adams, who was born Oct. 30, 1735, served one term in the presidency from 1797 to 1801 before retiring to his farm in Quincy, where he died on July 4, 1826, 50 years to the day since passage of the Declaration of Independence.

Reminder: Change Your Clock, Change Your Battery

(NAPSA)-Surprising to many Americans is the fact that 25 million homes are at needless risk due to worn or missing smoke detectors, according to the National Fire Protection Association. Though 96 percent of American homes have smoke alarms, 19 percent do not have at least one smoke alarm that works, mostly due to dead or missing batteries. This is just one reason why the International Association of Fire Chiefs (IAFC) and Energizer remind families to keep safe this fall by changing the batteries in their smoke alarms when they change their clocks back from daylight saving time.

In 2008, the day to set your clocks back and change the batteries in your smoke detectors is November 2.

The Change Your Clock Change Your Battery(r) message also reminds families to change the batteries in their carbon monoxide detectors and their emergency flashlights so they are prepared in case a severe winter storm causes a power outage in their home.

The Change Your Clock Change Your Battery campaign is part of an overall family safety program championed by Energizer and the IAFC. Through their Keep Safe. Keep Going(r) initiative, the two organizations not only inform families about fire safety in the fall, but they also encourage them to be prepared for natural disasters that typically occur during spring and summer months.

IAFC reminds people that the best way to protect your family in a home fire is to have a working smoke detector. A smoke detector doubles your chances of surviving a home fire-but only if it works.

Here are some safety facts from the IAFC you need to know:

Fire Facts
• 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. are the peak hours for home fires-when most people are asleep and the house is dark.

• Approximately every three hours, a home fire death occurs somewhere in the nation.

• Two-thirds of home fire deaths result from fires in homes without working smoke alarms.

• Only 23 percent of U.S. families have developed and practiced a home fire escape plan to ensure they could escape quickly and safely. Developing a family emergency escape plan can be crucial to everyone's safety.

Carbon Monoxide Facts
• Carbon monoxide is sometimes called "the silent killer." It is colorless, odorless and tasteless.

• More than 500 people in the U.S. die each year from accidental carbon monoxide (CO) poisoning.

• Symptoms of carbon monoxide poisoning include headache, weakness, dizziness, nausea, vomiting, chest pain and confusion.

Flashlight Facts

• Candles used for light in the absence of electrical power cause one-third of fatal home fires.

• Candles are the third-leading cause of injuries from home fires, following cooking and heating.

• When your power goes out, use flashlights instead of candles.

• Use the time change to check the batteries in your flashlights.

The IAFC is a nonprofit association representing nearly 13,000 chief fire officers and emergency services leaders worldwide. Its members are the world's leading experts in firefighting, emergency medical services, terrorism response, hazardous materials spills, natural disasters, search and rescue and public safety legislation.

You can learn more about fire safety online at www.iafc.org and www.energizer.com.

Trained Professionals, Online Tools Can Help Seniors Find A New Home

(ARA) - Helping a parent move to senior housing can seem more intimidating than orchestrating a rocket launch.

The death of a spouse, declining health or safety concerns can trigger the need to move. The first phase comes with the realization that what has been home is no longer suitable.

Emotional ties to a place are hard to overcome. Finding a new home that is appealing and appropriate is no easy task, and neither is culling through a lifetime's accumulation of "stuff."

It may not take a rocket scientist to work through this multi-phase life change. But finding a professional who knows the ropes can make it easier for the more than 29 percent of home sellers age 65 and older who move into an active-adult community or senior-related housing each year.

That professional may be a Seniors Real Estate Specialist (SRES), an agent who receives special training and demonstrates the expertise to navigate the unique housing needs of clients age 50 and older. "Services to seniors are changing to meet the lifestyles we live. Senior communities are changing to meet the expectations of baby boomers and today's retirees, too," says Carol Kairis, managing director, SRES Council and Specialties, National Association of Realtors.

"The range of senior housing options is diverse and would surprise many Americans who often think of senior housing as only nursing homes. Assisted living facilities address the needs of those who need support services, and continuing care retirement communities are wonderful options for those who wish to age in place."

Nationwide, more than 16,000 realtors have attained the SRES designation. In the same way a real estate agent recommends a plumber or landscaper to a client, an SRES agent assembles a team to address client needs -- repair companies, professional organizers, estate sales agents, and senior move managers who pack, transport and unpack in the new location.

"An SRES agent can help you develop a strategy, then bring in a team to help take one room at a time to organize and dispose of goods.

They can help you decide where you're going to go, and recommend a mover," says Armand Christopher, a seasoned SRES real estate broker and member of the SRES National Advisory Board of the National Association of Realtors.

Christopher has an active practice in the Dallas-Fort Worth area and offers these tips no matter where seniors live:

1. Plan ahead. Don't wait for a health crisis to start the process. The smoothest transitions occur when the person moving is in the driver's seat.

2. Engage professionals. SRES agents understand the dynamics of a senior move. They are trained about the benefits and drawbacks of reverse mortgages and can help you understand how to use pensions, 401K accounts and IRAs in real estate transactions. They also know how Medicare, Medicaid and Social Security will affect your real estate decisions.

3. Get a full assessment of the current situation. Physical care needs and financial resources are where to start. Consider the costs of staying in place, including renovation and ongoing maintenance. Add the cost of rising utility bills and taxes, and don't forget transportation and food. Make a list and decide whether it's cheaper to stay or move to a community designed for seniors.

4. Take a multi-phase approach. Christopher says his customers often take longer than a year to actually make the move. An SRES agent can connect the senior with professionals to help walk through the process.

5. Fully explore new housing options. Senior living offers a broader range of options than ever before. SRES agents have an understanding of the services each type of community can provide and can best match the client with the right place.

Christopher and other SRES professionals use SNAPforSeniors (www.snapforseniors.com), an online search tool that is akin to the Multiple Listing Service for senior housing. The SNAPforSeniors database includes more than 60,000 licensed senior housing facilities in the country and is available at no charge.

Clearing Away Clutter

Q: My husband and I are both terrible at managing clutter. It seems that every time one of us manages to clear a space of stuff, more junk appears to fill it up! How can we get rid of all the clutter in our house? — Jane W., via e-mail

A: Clutter is a very common problem in American society, so you're not alone. None of us likes to be without our "stuff," even when that stuff is pushing us out the door.

Ellen Phillips, author of "Kick the Clutter: Clear Out Excess Stuff Without Losing What You Love" (Rodale Inc., $17.95), writes that there are several types of personalities that attract clutter. For example: The collector, who amasses lots of his or her favorite items; the inheritor, who "inherits" items from family members or friends; and the compulsive shopper, who buys things because they are a bargain or needed.

The first step to getting rid of clutter, whether you fall into the above categories or not, is to recognize the traits that make you susceptible to amassing clutter, and then work consciously, every day, on not giving in to those traits. In this way it's very much like going on a diet.

Once you've addressed the reason why clutter comes in the door, set priorities for tackling the existing clutter. You don't have to tackle it all at once; budget your time for cleaning up. And don't overdo it — just do a little at a time, but regularly.

And be sure to do this as a couple. If both of you have brought in clutter, you both should take it out. Don't blame each other or try to make the other spouse feel guilty about it, but instead work together to prioritize and de-clutter your home.

A Job Well Done

On Wednesday, October 8, 2008, at approximately 4:45 p.m., Detective Gerard O'Rourke was parked in the Star Market lot when he noticed a male driver with a female occupant sitting in a car far away from the stores.

LT. DAN MINTON

Detective O'Rourke ran the plate of the vehicle and learned that the suspect had a guilty charge for "Possession of Class D Substance." Soon after, the suspect vehicle left the lot and followed a green vehicle to Arthur Street, where the vehicles came to a stop. The female passenger then got out of the suspect car and entered the rear seat of the green car. Detective O'Rourke drove by the green car, occupied by two males and noted the license plate. The green car drove off with the suspect car behind it.

Detectives William O'Brien and Bill Ward assisted in the surveillance of the two vehicles. The vehicles stopped on Buckley Street at Suomi Road, where the female exited the green vehicle and returned to the suspect vehicle. The vehicles then drove off in different directions. The detectives had reason to believe that a drug transaction may have occurred, so they split up and followed the vehicles. Detective O'Brien followed the suspect vehicle while Detective O'Rourke followed the green car. Officer Barry DeFranco assisted Detective O'Rourke in stopping the green car on Common Street while Officer Dennis Keenan stopped the suspect vehicle at Ross Way and Granite Street.

Detective O'Rourke and Officer DeFranco approached the two male suspects in the green car and questioned them separately. Both males had completely different stories and neither one included the female suspect who was just seen in their car. When asked who the girl was, they denied any knowledge of a girl or driving her one block and then getting out.

Detective Ward notified Detective O'Rourke that the female admitted that she met with the males to purchase heroin and had done so in the past, but since she did not have any money, no sale had taken place. Based on this information, Detective O'Rourke frisked the suspects and their vehicle, finding a sock underneath the center console by the dashboard. Inside the sock was a loaded Colt 380 handgun. Neither suspect had a license to carry the weapon so both were arrested for "Possession of a Firearm without a License and Conspiracy to Violate the Controlled Substance Laws."

Both suspects were transported to the station. The suspect vehicle was also towed to the station, where State Trooper John Fallon and his K-9 unit scanned the car for narcotics odor. The dog indicated an area near the front passenger seat, where Detective Brian Coen found a small plastic bag consistent with heroin. An additional charge of "Possession of Class A Substance with the Intent to Distribute" was added to both suspects. Since no purchase was made, the male and female in the suspect car were not charged.

Nice Work!

RECENT SCAM: A citizen recently attempted to sell his college textbook on "Facebook" on the Internet for $50.00. He received an email from a person wanting to buy the book and would forward a check. A few days later, the victim received a check for $1,050.00. Another email followed stating that the buyer made a mistake with the check and requested that the victim return the difference in check to a designated address.
